A PERFECT VIOLIN.

It is Said That Such an Instrument
Does Not Exist.

"After studying the violin for 25 years
and spending several thousand dollars in foreign travel to complete this investigation," an experienced musician said to
me recently, "the fact confronts me, as
well as the musical world, that there is not on earth today a perfect violin. Most of the old Cremonas extant I have tested, but as these have all had to be re-barred and reckoned in the attempt to bring them up to modern pitch requirements they have necessarily all been thrown out of the acoustic proportion
and adjustment originally designed by
their makers, and so are, consequently,
imperfect makeshifts. Most of these have beautiful tone quality, but they are weak."

PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION

John T. Roach before the Magistrate to Answer to a Charge of Robbing
the Dominion Bank.

REMANDED FOR TRIAL.

On Wednesday morning John T. Roach appeared before the Police Magistrate at the court house to answer to a charge of robbing the Dominion Bank on Aug. 28th, 1897 of $33,000.

Roach was brought into the court room
chained to the Chief of Police and guarded by constables Huff and Sills. The prisoner does not look as well as when he first appeared, confinement evidently not agreeing with him very well. He is about 25 years of age and quite an ordinary looking man, light complexion.

The first witness called was Mr. E. H.
Baines. He deposed as to the amount stolen from the bank and various other items re the former trials. He testified as to the evidence given by Holden and Pare connecting Roach with the robbery.

Nathan Meeks sworn, deposed that he lived in Napanee and formerly lived in the Township of Richmond near the Belleville road crossing. Saw Pare and Holden and Mackie near the crossing also another man.
Prisoner did not look like the man, the man wore a dark suit of clothes pretty shabby.

Willie Joy testified that he remembered
the Dominion Bank robbery, saw Pare and Holden also saw Jack Roach with them
during the summer holidays of 1897, saw him behind Craig's grist mill and also took him up the river in a boat about two weeks after he first saw him, did not hear his name at that time.

Cross examined by Roach he corroborated his former evidence and described Pare and Holden. Did not hear prisoner say anything to Pare and Holden in reference to robbery.

Sid. Scott testified that he remembered
the bank robbery and the men arrested for it. Saw Pare and Holden several times, once in his sap house and prisoner looks very much like one of the men he saw there. Saw Pare and Holden and another man on the road.

Cross examined by Roach. Would not swear positively that Roach was one of the men in his sap house.

E. H. Sills testified as to his connection with the former trials. Saw Roach in May or June 1897, in company with two others came out of the Market hotel yard
on Bridge street, and were stopped by witness under the electric light. Was present at trial of Ponton and Mackie and heard sworn testimony of Pare and Holden
as to prisoner's connection with the robbery
and his presence in the bank on one occasion.

Cross examined by Roach. Had not any doubts that prisoner was one of the men he stopped.

Frank Vanalstine sworn, testified that he had heard of Roach being connected with the robbery. Saw prisoner with Pare and Holden near the river in June or July 1897.
Saw prisoner going from witness' barn in
company with Pare and Holden.

Cross examined, swore positively as to Roach being the man he saw on those occasions.

The Read picnic passed off very quietly. All seemed well pleased with the days' pleasure. The handsome sum of $950 was realized. The two young ladies who worked so energeti-

were rewarded for their work a hand-

tion," an experienced musician said to
me recently, "the fact confronts me, as
well as the musical world, that there is
not on earth today a perfect violin. Most
of the old Cremonas extant I have tested, but as these have all had to be re-barred and renecked in the attempt to bring them up to modern pitch requirements they have necessarily all been
thrown out of the acoustic proportion
and adjustment originally designed by
their makers, and so are, consequently,
imperfect makeshifts. Most of these
have beautiful tone quality, but they are
weak.

"As the violin is considered the foundation of all instrumental structure, I put forth the plea that some concerted action should be taken by those interested to perfect the violin. In doing this all instruments played with the bow will,
of necessity, be improved, as their fundamental principles are identical.

"The first step in the solution of this problem is to abandon all the misinformation contained in the books on violin
making, and also the advice of the violin
makers and repairers, for these men all follow the books; consequently not one violin worthy the name has been or ever will be made by them so long as these errors are persisted in.

"Two hundred years of their gross stupidity in thus blindly following these de-lusions, with no results whatever, should be enough to prove the truth of my position. I take this decided stand only in the hope of advancing the art of music,
and consequently the interests of thousands of musical artists, some of whom are obscure and needy only because they can get no instrument capable of exhibiting their skill.

"I am not content to accept an Amati,
a Stradivarius or a Guarnerius as the highest standard possible. I want something better than was ever produced in the workshops of Cremona, and I know that concerted intelligence can produce
it."

The Trouble With the Watch.

"I wish you would tell me what is the matter with this watch," said the customer, passing it over the counter.

"It stops occasionally, and you have to shake it hard to make it go, don't you?" inquired the jeweler after he had examined the timepiece with the aid of an eyeglass.

"Yes."

"Sometimes you have to open it and start the balance wheel with a tooth-pick or something of that kind?"

"Yes."

"Perhaps you don't blow blow through the works to get the dust out as often as you should."

"I've done that dozens of times, and it doesn't seem to do any good."

"Well, what really ails the watch is that it has a darned fool for an owner,"
said the jeweler.

This, however, was the remark he made to himself. What he said to the customer was that it needed about $5
worth of repairs

Pay of College Professors.

College professors in the United States are poorly paid as compared with the more liberal procedure at foreign universities. The same grade of professor who receives from $2,500 to $4,000 (nearly the maximum) in this country is paid from $4,000 to $6,000 in England. Several chairs in both Edinburgh and Glasgow
draw from $8,000 to $12,000, and in Aberdeen a number of chairs, both scientific and medical, run about $5,000. The leading chairs in the University of Berlin are present at trial of Ponton and Mackie and

as to prisoner's connection with the robbery
and his presence in the bank on one
occasion.

Cross examined by Roach. Had not any doubt that prisoner was one of the
men he stopped.

Frank Vanaalstine sworn, testified that he had heard of Roach being connected with
the robbery. Saw prisoner with Pare and
Holden near the river in June or July 1897.
Saw prisoner going from witness' barn in
company with Pare and Holden.

Cross examined, swore positively as to Roach being the man he saw on those
occasions.

Garratt Joy testified that he remembered robbery, knew Pare and Holden. Prisoner would fill the bill as the third man he saw around his mill and at the spring near it.

Cross examined by Roach. Would not swear positively as to Roach's identity but thought he was the man. Saw prisoner about one hundred yards away.

Mr. Deroche addressed a few words to the court asking for a commitment for trial and stated the clause of the criminal code under which the prisoner was being tried, as an accomplice of Pare, Holden and Mackie and that the evidence showed that prisoner was evidently one of the party who made the plan, which succeeded,
though without his direct assistance.

The prisoner called no witnesses nor did
he make any statement in his defence.
The magistrate committed the prisoner for trial at the next assizes, the evidence showing conclusive proof of his being associated with Pare and Holden a short time about the time of the robbery.

A VIGOROUS PROTEST.

A Cobourg paper enters a vigorous protest against the Ponton trial being held at that place. It says: Now that Pare, Holden and Roach said to be the principals
in the Napanee bank robbery, have been arrested, and lodged in the jail, the trial of W. H. Ponton is again attracting the attention of the public. By the decision of the judges at Toronto, Cobourg was the place set down for the next hearing of the case. Of course that matter was easily settled, but as the county in which the trial is held is to bear the expense, the place chosen should have been consulted.
These counties were not consulted, and as we already have to contribute a large amount for the administration of justice
within the counties, all are sufficient.
If the crown is to continue against Ponton
until judgment day we think it nothing but proper that the Government should bear all the expense. If the counties of Northumberland and Durham are expected to expend money to carry on the court to prosecute Ponton or any of his alleged confederates, every effort should be put forth to again have the venue changed.
We do not want the trial held in Cobourg."

ALGER HAS RESIGNED.

Secretary Alger on Wednesday tendered to the President his resignation to the War portfolio. The resignation will become effective Aug. 1, though it was tendered "at the pleasure of the President." His conduct of the war resulting in the kick of the newspaper correspondents against the press
censorship in the Philippines, has led to this action.

Preserving Wood.

A curious byproduct of zinc is chloride
or salts of zinc, which formerly went to waste, but now is used as a wood preservative by railroads, bridge builders and dock builders, and for the protection of shingles, clapboards, pillars and any other wood that is exposed to moisture or influences that cause decay. The salts of zinc, in solution, by hydraulic pressure
are forced into the pores of the wood,
which is then soaked in a strong solution of tannin and glue. The ties and piling now used on the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific and other western roads are treated in this manner. The railway companies named use from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds a year each. With this treatment
a pine tie, which is the only kind that can be found out in the mountain country,
will last three times as long as one of oak.

OR,

CHAPTER XXXVII.—Continued.

"Why, Angel, I really think you are a lucky girl! To think that you hold all the trump cards in your hands, and have such a grand gambling game before you! Chance, indeed! Are you not young and pretty, and always with him?—as good as gold and as sweet as hawthorn blossom? Do you think any man could resist you if you set to work to try and win him? Oh, I would not sit and cry if I were you! I would try with all my might and main to see if I could get the better of that 'other woman.' Win Geoffrey yourself, defy the spiteful words of a spiteful sister-in-law, and show her that it was a wicked lie that she told you! Begin this very day, my dear!"

"Do you think I could, Dulcie?"

"I am sure of it, Angel. Think what a grand advantage it is to be actually a man's wife. Oh, if you try hard enough, you will succeed, I promise you!"

Then Angel hid her face upon her sister's shoulder.

"Dulcie," she whispered, "I have a secret to tell you—do you know that I have made a wonderful discovery? I always thought, you know, that I loved Horace Lessiter—I did once, you see—and therefore I thought that I could never love anybody else. When I was married, I said to myself that I would be a good and dutiful wife, but that I could be nothing more—but since—since I think the very hour that dreadful man said he loved me, and tried to say disparaging things of Geoffrey—something has suddenly come to me. Perhaps it was the horror I felt, the disgust at his insolence, or perhaps it is Geoffrey's coldness that has hurt me, and this horrible jealousy which is eating away my heart—I don't know how or why it is, but I have discovered all at once that I am in love with him! Oh, but desperately, dreadfully in love!"

"Oh, Angel! Angel!" and Dulcie covered the blushing face with kisses of unfeigned delight. "So you see you have love as well to help you to win your battle!"

For some minutes neither sister spoke; they remained silent, fast locked in each other's arms.

Then very seriously Angel raised her face and looked anxiously into Dulcie's eyes.

"Dulcie."

"My dearest."

"Don't think me a great fool, but—but don't you honestly think that Geoffrey is a very handsome man?"

"He is an Adonis, my dear, a very Adonis, with a touch of the Apollo and flavouring of a Cupid!"

And then she jumped up from her lowly position and laughed merrily and heartily.

But all this time she had said not a word about her own concerns.

Truth to say, Dulcie was a coward. She knew that she was about to fling an explosive machine down into the bosom of her family, and she was a little bit afraid of the storm and confusion she was certain to bring upon herself. That Dulcie, the practical, the sensible, should be the one to fling herself away in a reckless and imprudent fashion upon a man so poor, that without her father's assistance, he would certainly be unable to keep her in bread and cheese was to say the least of it somewhat galling to her vanity. She felt, too, that really there was no special reason to show to the world's eye for her folly. If it had been Geoffrey now, there would have been some excuse. Geoffrey had all the needful charm of look and manner wherewith to storm successfully the citadel of feminine hearts; there was something interesting and poetical, and intensely fascinating about Geoffrey—but what her little fiats together, "so that wretch thinks he can force me into giving Miles up, does he? He imagines that of course I shall drop him the very moment he has succeeded in ruining him! You don't know much about Dulcie Halliday, my young friend!"

And then she got out a telegraph form and wrote this characteristic message:

All rubbish. Refuse to be given up. Prefer paupers. Come down here immediately."

"Strict obedience!" she murmured to herself, with an odd little smile of amusement. "He did not say I was not to telegraph!"

Then, after she had given hermissive to the groom, she came back to the writing-table and took out a sheet of paper.

"This settles it!" she muttered, dipping her pen into the ink. And then she wrote:

"Dear Father,—I suppose you will think me quite mad, although I can't help it if you do. I am going to marry Miles Faulkner. I hope you will give me something to marry upon, in addition to the four hundred a year which comes to me under my mother's marriage settlement, and which, as I am of age, I suppose I shall have a right to. Of course I am aware that this is very little, and so I hope you will kindly make some further provision for me. I have thought it all over for some time, and have quite made up my mind to marry nobody else on earth but Miles, so it is too late to make me change my determination, but not too late, my dear father, to give me your blessing and your help. I fear I may be disappointing some of your ambitions, but you are too good a father not to see that happiness and affection are, after all, the best things to make a marriage successful.—Your affectionate child, Dulcie."

"P.S.—By the way, I hear Miles is turned out of the business. This will make not the slightest difference to me, as it would be a mean thing, as you will agree, to throw a man over because he is in trouble. I suppose it is a trick of that detestable little cad, Trichet. I always hated the little beast! He is more like a monkey than a man, I think!"

Dulcie felt proud of this composition more particularly of the postscript.

"That will prevent the chance of any misunderstanding on that score!" she said to herself, as she folded and addressed the letter. "It will show papa that I consider Miles' dismissal as a matter of minor importance, and also put any little dreams he may have had on the subject of my becoming Mrs. Albert Trichet out of his calculations. No woman who describes a suitor for her hand as a monkey, could, by any possibility, be expected to retract the expression and marry him, under any pressure of circumstances whatever! It's just as well papa should see exactly how matters stand!"

After that, Miss Halliday felt as happy as a bird—a happiness which was in no way diminished by the sight of Geoffrey and Angel coming towards the house together from the stables.

Dulcie saw that Geoffrey looked pale and ill, but that he was apparently making an effort to talk to his wife; and presently, as she watched them, she saw Angel half shyly, and with a quick, nervous glance at her husband's face, slip her hand through his arm, of her own accord.

Geoffrey was evidently surprised, and a little colour mounted to his brow, but after a minute he laid his other hand upon his wife's, and looked pleased.

Perhaps coming straight from that sad interview upon the Downs, Geoffrey Dane might reasonably have car-

tell you. I don't know what you will say about it, although I may as well tell you at once that it doesn't matter very much what you say," here she looked quite defiantly at them both, "because I have quite made up my mind—"

"Good gracious, Dulcie!" murmured Angel, turning a little pale at this alarming preamble, whilst Geoffrey only bent his brown eyes very attentively upon her.

"The fact of the matter is, that—I am going to marry—Miles Faulkner!" said Dulcie, a little breathlessly, but flinging the words in a staccato fashion at them, as if in very truth they were little burning squibs, and then shut her lips up with a snap, and looked quickly from one to the other, as though to ask, "Now, what have you got to say to that?"

Geoffrey's answer was to reach out both his hands to her, and to shake hers very heartily.

"Then you are going to marry one of the very best fellows in the whole world, Dulcie, and I only hope that you are good enough to deserve him."

Dulcie's eyes literally shone with delight, and her face broke out into smiles. No answer in the world could have pleased her better.

"I don't deserve him in the very least, of course," she answered, with a little saucy toss of her chin; "but that's his affair, Geoff, and meanwhile, I am looking to you to help us. Do you know that those terrible old men—your uncle and papa, I mean—have given him his dismissal from the house."

"Yes; I heard of it the other day. I couldn't make it out," murmured Geoffrey, and a sense of shame and contrition filled him that the trouble of his friend had made so little impression upon him—how selfish, after all, he had been in his own grief! It was not thus surely Rose de Brefour would have treated a friend who was suffering under ill-fortune. He had gone away and absolutely forgotten the bad news he had heard about a man who had been his greatest friend. He had not made an effort in his behalf, nor even proffered one inquiry concerning his probable fate. Poor old Miles!

"You see it is that hateful little sneak Trichet who has done it," Dulcie was saying; "they wanted me—those two silly old idiots—to marry him, and he was jealous of Miles, and thought he would get him out of the way. But you are such a favourite with your uncle, Geoff, that I am sure if you try you could get things put right for him."

"And so I will try!" cried Geoffrey. "I will go up to London to-morrow about it. Albert Trichet starts for South America this very night, and when he is safe out of the way my uncle is far more likely to listen to anything I say. Don't you worry yourself, Dulcie. Write and ask old Miles down here for a day or two—"

"I have telegraphed to him to come already," said Dulcie, demurely. "That's right, I'll be off by the 8.10 in the morning, Angel. I'll get that put right for you somehow, Dulcie; the House shall not leave the dear old boy out in the cold if I can help it."

He was full of a new enthusiasm and energy—already work for others, that grand panacea for private trouble, lay under his very hand. "There are other things in life to live for," Rose said when she bade him turn his back upon love for ever. Was she not always right?

"Order breakfast for me at seven to-morrow," he said to his wife, as they went into the house, "and I'll have the dog-cart to take me to the station." Then, turning to Dulcie, he added with a smile, "Angel will have to wait till Monday to ride The Moor. You see, she has nobody now to pilot her but me!"

So Angel had her reward too.

AWFUL TALE OF THE

THE SHORES OF QUEENSLAND
STREWN WITH CORPSES

Women Swept From the Mizen of the Steamship Loch Sloy in the east South Sea Hurricane Since the Wave at Samoa Ten Years Ago.

A handful of sick, starved and now being slowly nursed back to health at Victoria, B.C., have their rescuers the story of the death of a brave ship and of more than two score lives.

There was small chance for a boat that sailed into the path of a fearful hurricane that for weeks swept ravenously across the South and along the Queensland coast waters had seethed and roared tossed, and many a good boat was ed under them by a single bill the pitiless wind.

Two of the stoutest ships afloat the freight ship Loch Sloy and Majesty's warship Pylades. But two now lie wrecked on reefs off Australian shore. Of the fight the Loch Sloy bravely made and there are three survivors to tell.

Twenty-four lives were lost w Loch Sloy, whose wreck was one of the most shocking disasters that have been known in the Southern sea. The boat herself was shattered into pieces. The only men aboard her who perished endured such an ordeal of suffering and starvation as has been described. Women who had hurried shrieking from the ship where they clung suffered deaths in the water.

With the superstition of all men, these stout-hearted Britons declare that the Loch Sloy was due to her evil star. No good they say, could befall a ship to the ocean fates had shown them plainly hostile since the voyage she first "found herself." Two ago her sister ship, the Loch, set sail from Sydney and was heard of again.

ILL-LUCK PURSUED SHIP

It was in January that the Loch sailed from Glasgow in command of Capt. Nichol, with a crew of fifty prentices, twelve able seamen, sail-makers, a cook, a carpenter boy. Mrs. Nichol accompanied the band, and the other passenger Mrs. Cartridge, Capt. and Mr. Carter, John Lamb, Walter Log James Kirkpatrick.

Ill-luck pursued the ship from start. Storms alternated with palling seasons of fog and were lowed by leakages and a train of ills. When Kangaroo Island sighted the ship's people shouted of joy. Had the island been ed a few hours sooner the wreck have been avoided. The lack of a house was the chief cause of disaster.

It was in the middle of the watch on the morning of May "Land ho!" shouted the look. The crew were sunning themselves under the ice rail, enjoying a coffee after the hard work of storm. The ship was going like a horse. Breakers loomed up amidst the eddying seas. "Bout ship!" shouted the captain and all hands jumped for the herself away in a reckless and improvident fashion upon a man so poor, that without her father's assistance, he would certainly be unable to keep her in bread and cheese was to say the least of it somewhat galling to her vanity. She felt, too, that really there was no special reason to show to the world's eye for her folly. If it had been Geoffrey now, there would have been some excuse. Geoffrey had all the needful charm of look and manner wherewith to storm successfully the citadel of feminine hearts; there was something interesting and poetical, and intensely fascinating about Geoffrey—but what on earth could there be in honest Miles Faulkner, that a girl like Dulcie Halliday should throw herself away upon and consider "the world well lost" for his sake?

"I do verily believe it is on account of his size!" Dulcie would say, with a rueful disgust to herself. "They say savages are impressed by brute force and gigantic stature—it is their only standard of excellence. At heart, there is not a doubt of it, I must be an Ojibway Indian!"

Nevertheless, Dulcie did not repent of her infatuation, and had not the smallest intention of drawing back from her bargain—only she shrank from the confession of it.

After her little talk with Angel, she went out and walked dreamily about the garden, pacing thoughtfully along the newly-laid out paths. Not a doubt of it that her intentions could no longer be kept a secret; her father must be written to and Angel and Geoffrey must be told.

"A hundred and twenty pounds a year," she said aloud, with a certain grim sense of amusement. "It's preposterous, of course; I almost wish it were nothing at all; the measure of romantic idiocy would at least be poetically fuller!" The words were scarcely out of her mouth, before she had a practical opportunity of testing her aspirations to their uttermost.

The second post had just arrived, and a servant came out and brought her a letter. It was from Miles, and the very first glimpse showed it to be of a most unprecedented brevity. With a vague wonder at its shortness, she began to read:

"My dearest Dulcie,—AM must be over between us for ever—our engagement must be broken off. Mr. Dane has dismissed me from the business, I do now know why, but think it is Albert Trichet's doing. Of course this puts marriage out of the question with me for years—I am a pauper. God bless you—I can't write more. I feel a bit bowled over. You needn't write, I'd rather you didn't—M.F."

For some moments Dulcie remained staring down silently at this letter, with no other sign of emotion save a slightly heightened colour. Then, I much regret to be obliged to state the three words that fell slowly and deliberately from her lips.

They were neither lady-like nor refined words, and I only record them from a strict sense of duty, and because to render a tale absolutely and unvarnishedly truthful, it is necessary, occasionally, to offend the susceptibilities of punctilious persons. In hopes that the apology I tender may in some measure mitigate the shock that Dulcie is about to inflict upon my readers, what she actually said must now be revealed:

"The infernal blackguard!" was what Miss Halliday said aloud, in a calm and remarkably sweet-tempered manner. And it is quite certain that it was not to poor Miles that she made allusion.

Then walking back towards the house slowly putting her letter back into the envelope as she went, she came across a groom just coming round from the stables.

"Can you take a telegram down to the post-office for me at once?" she enquired of the man.

"Yes, miss."

"Then wait here, and I will bring it to you in a moment."

She went into the drawing-room, and sat down to the writing-table.

"Ah!" she said, savagely clenching

stables. Dulcie saw that Geoffrey looked pale and ill, but that he was apparently making an effort to talk to his wife; and presently, as she watched them, she saw Angel half shyly, and with a quick, nervous glance at her husband's face, slip her hand through his arm, of her own accord.

Geoffrey was evidently surprised, and a little colour mounted to his brow, but after a minute he laid his other hand upon his wife's, and looked pleased.

Perhaps coming straight from that sad interview upon the Downs, Geoffrey Dane might reasonably have cared for a little interval of solitude and thought ere he was called upon to begin to tread the path which his lost love had pointed out to him. But life sometimes hurries us on in an unaccountable fashion, and when, as he turned into the stable-yard and flung himself off his foam-flecked horse, he was met by Angel, coming out hatless from the house to greet him on his return, something in her timid smile made him remember Rose de Breffort's words: "It is always possible for a man to make a young wife love him."

Was it? he wondered. At any rate, he had made up his mind that he would try.

A certain surprise came upon him, too, at the manner in which Angel greeted him; there was a shade of embarrassment in her welcome, and a sense of being met half-way in her manner, that he had not noticed in her before.

He spoke to her at once about the horse, and told her that he would rather she waited a day or two before riding him to hounds.

"Take him out for an hour along the roads if you like, he is very fresh, and wants exercise, and wait to hunt him till next week."

She agreed, with all her accustomed gentleness, yet pleaded that she might at least hunt on the following Monday. "The mare will not be right for a week, Gibson says, and Weldon Gorse is such a good meet, Geoff, and if you will be so good as to look after me a bit—"

"There is Captain Lessiter to do that, is there not?" he said, a little shortly, making not a question but an assertion of the remark.

"Captain Lessiter has gone away," said Angel quietly.

"Indeed!" He looked at her inquiringly, and a certain dim perception of things he had never yet thought about came into his mind, when he saw the hot colour rise like a flame in his wife's fair face.

"Captain Lessiter will not come back, Geoffrey," she went on with an effort; "he—he has offended me mortally. I shall never speak to him again."

It cost her a great deal to say this. Geoffrey was looking at her curiously—something became suddenly revealed to him; she was not then cold, as he had always believed her to be, only, as with himself, things had gone wrong. His infinite tact and sympathy saved him from the fatal error which nine men out of ten would have fallen into in the circumstances. He refrained from asking her a single question, or from demanding the slightest explanation from her. Only he said very quietly and simply, just as if he knew all about it—

"Thank you, my dear. I am quite sure you have done right."

And then it was that Angel, touched by his trust and his generosity, slipped her hand, in a shy, caressing fashion, under his arm.

Geoffrey had never felt so drawn to her before. "Perhaps, after all, she will grow to love me a bit," he said to himself, as he laid his hand softly upon the little, timid fingers upon his arm; "and I may at least be able to make her happy."

And so Dulcie met them on the lawn as she came out of the long French window of the drawing-room, with all sorts of great purposes in her determined little face.

"Look here, Angel and Geoff," she began, plunging after her habit right into the very middle of her theme, "I have got something very startling to right. "Order breakfast for me at seven tomorrow," he said to his wife, as they went into the house, "and I'll have the dog-cart to take me to the station." Then, turning to Dulcie, he added with a smile, "Angel will have to wait till Monday to ride The Moor. You see, she has nobody now to pilot her but me!"

DO BABIES' THINK?

Professor Ribot, of France, Advances a New Theory.

Do children think before they can talk?

Professor Ribot, the great French psychologist, says that they do, denying the old fashioned notion that we must think in words or not at all. He bases his conclusion on the systematic study of the children of scientific men who have recorded the growth of their intelligence step by step.

He cites the case of the child of Preyer, aged thirty-one weeks. Preyer was a famous student, writer and scientist. His child interested itself exclusively in bottles, water jugs and other transparent vases with white contents; it had thus seized upon a characteristic mark of one thing that was important to it; to wit, milk. At a later period it designated these by the syllable "mom."

Another illustration is that of a boy, aged less than one year and incapable of pronouncing a single word, to whom a stuffed grouse was shown with the word "bird" uttered to identify it. The child immediately looked across to the other side of the room, where there was a stuffed owl.

A child, having listened first with its right ear, then with its left, to the ticking of a watch, stretched out its arms gleefully toward the clock on the mantelpiece.

Darwin related these observations of his grandson:—"The child, who was just beginning to speak, called a duck 'quack,' and by special association it also called water 'quack.' By an appreciation of the resemblance of qualities it next extended the term 'quack' to denote all birds and insects on the one hand and all fluid substances on the other. By a still more delicate appreciation of resemblance the child eventually called all the coins 'quack,' because on the back of a French sou it had once seen the representation of an eagle."

Preyer says of one of his children that it was impossible to take away one of his nine-pins without its being discovered by the child, while at eighteen months he knew quite well whether one of his ten animals was missing or not. Yet this is no proof that he was able to count up to nine or ten.

At seventeen months Preyer's child, which could not speak a word, finding that it was unable to obtain a plaything placed above its reach in a cupboard, looked about to the right and left, found a small traveling trunk, took it, climbed up and possessed itself of the desired object. Here there is certainly an element of invention.

The Queen of England and the Czar of Russia own beautiful typewriters of white enamel and gold, ivory keys. The Queen Regent of Spain is said to use one for her correspondence. In so ceremonious a court as that of Spain, where phrases are long and weighty, it must be a welcome labor saver.

Lady Cook & Co., have gone into the stockbroking business in London, the motto of the firm being: "Never sell what you haven't got; buy at the lowest figure; be satisfied with quick returns and small profits."

WOMEN CLIMBED RIGG

The knowledge that the ship was doomed and that all lives were in danger spread over the ship with terrible swiftness. Passengers at silent and white-faced, struggled to save themselves by climbing the rigging.

The women, trembling with terror of it all, climbed to the top. The mates, seven of them and the three passengers followed when they could. Others clung to the mainmast and foremast.

In three minutes the mainmast with a crash over the weather. Those who had been clinging to it plunged into the sea. Wave after wave ate away the good ship's hull till her supports crumbled away. The foremast toppled. A few minutes later the mizzen carrying all with it, and the last of saving the ship vanished. Drowning men and women threatened only death ahead. The huge waves were battering the ship's frame against the reef, and land was away. "I seized a lifebelt," said J. Simpson, an apprentice, one of the survivors, "and I remained on some wreckage, and then not far away. I managed to find some rocks, where I found Mr. McMillan and Kirkpatrick."

MEN FOUGHT WITH FAM

"We picked up a case of herring and some cans of herring, and gave them the strength to make it to a cave on the shore."

From this point the story of the survivors is pitiful enough. They crawled to the summit of a cliff, an unspeakably barren where not a drop of water could be found. The next day Mitchell Simpson, suffering severely from cold and hunger as well as from exposure, made their way up the cliff for several miles in the finding either a human being or water. Failure added to their torture. They had not the strength to return to their companions, and the night under some bushes.

The next day Mitchell and Simpson, weak, but not yet hopeless, for water. McMillan came back with the good news that a spring had been found and to get a can to fill. The others never heard from him nor found the water that he had covered. They believed that he had overcome him and that he had

THREE WEEKS OF TORT

For three weeks the survivors had an existence of increasing torture. The only wonder is that they did not die. Occasional rain gave them only relief and they grew from lack of food that they were really masses of bones. On the third day they found a gully of water, and next day, somewhat revived, Simpson started out to make his way along the coast, leaving the others helpless to move for lack of food and exhaustion. In a day or two brave souls came up to the lighthouse. There was to help them here, but they had no strength to go further. So they slept within its shelter and subsisted upon such food as they could find until they were rescued by chance last week.

The tough, dry grass that grew here
and there in little clumps near the lighthouse was devoured eagerly by the famished men. Horrible as it seems,
they were glad to seize for food the dead penguins which they found there or the bits of shellfish, long washed ashore. This wretched sustenance, however, was almost worse than none, and the men could barely have lived another day had they not been found and cared for.

STORM'S GHASTLY TROPHIES.

To-day they are patrolling the whole length of the Queensland coast for dead bodies. More than one hundred bodies have already been washed ashore
and decently buried. Organized parties of settlers, with native guides, are searching the land along the coast for more bodies of the wretched victims.
Most appalling of all, more than four hundred widows and children are left destitute.

James Clark, President of the Clark Pearl Fishery Company, alone has buried thirty-eight victims of the storm, and this is the message he sends:

"Wreckage and death mark the way all along the seaboard from Cape
Melville, to the bottom of Bathurst Bay.

"The only vessel saved of forty that were anchored for safety along this stretch of Queensland coast had dragged into deeper water by sheerest accident. We recovered but ten of fifty-two vessels lost by our company, these minus sails, masts and gear, and the men who had manned them.

"We found the others under three fathoms of water, broken beyond repair; others were on the rocky beach,
aground and splintered into kindlings."

EFFECT OF SMOKELESS POWDER.

The Firing Said to be More Terrifying to Both Men and Horses.

In the British army the four-legged recruits are drawn up in a ring round an instructor who fires a pistol. Some take the flash and report very quietly and these are very soon passed on to severer trials, while the others have lesson after lesson until they are quite convinced that there is no danger to them and before long you might fire
a seven-pounder within a yard of them
and they would hardly look around.
After this they are taught to face fire—
that is to say to gallop fearlessly up to a line or square of infantry, blazing away with their rifles, and to charge batteries of quick-firing guns.
Of course, only blank cartridges are used, and so to a trained horse going into battle for the first time there is no difference between the harmless thunder of the maneuvers and the death-dealing storm which sweeps over the battlefield. The poor brute only learns what difference really is by bitter experience.

When smokeless powder came into general use it was found that in many cases horses which would face the smoke of guns using black powder without flinching, flinched and shied at the flash and roar unaccompanied by smoke. Continental opinion is somewhat divided as to the moral effect of smokeless powder on men and horses,
but the general conclusion seems to be
that in daylight it is not more terrifying than black powder, although some hold that to see men and horses
struck down by an invisible agency must necessarily be so. But it is generally agreed that the use of smokeless powder at night has a much more dis-

GARDNER A STRONG MAN.

HE WAS A GIANT WHO DID NOT KNOW HIS OWN STRENGTH.

A New Brunswick Man's Many Remarkable Feats Over a Century Ago—He Was the Wonder of the East.

Is it certain that the famous athletes
of the present day who seek applause
by breaking records, are, after all,
superior to the old-time performers
whose deeds were seldom chronicled?
Are modern clubs and college gymnasiums sending forth men able to discount the brawn and bone of their fathers? The modern professional strong man has his scientific methods
of training, his apparatus, and his specialties which he has practised for years, but could he vanquish the Sandows and Samsons of Maine and New Brunswick in the early logging days
at their own game, such as lifting with the handspike, shouldering a barrel of pork, or sculling a raft of logs off a lee shore? There are men still living on the St. John and the Penobscot who say that there were giants in those days whose feats of strength have never been equalled.
They refer, especially, to one Tom Gardner, the lion of Macnaquac, who was born on the banks of the St. John in the year 1793, and who had such strength that it was a real affliction
to him by reason of the crowds who followed him. The mere rumor that Tom was expected on his raft, or that he was walking up the road with his scull oar and warp over his shoulder,
would line the fences or the river bank
with people who wished to see so great a prodigy.

SOLID WALLS OF BONE.

Upon casual view, these people say,
no one would suppose that Gardner
possessed more muscle than an ordinary man of his inches. He was a mild-mannered, unassuming, flaxen-haired young man, rather slouching in his gait, 5 feet 10 inches in height, and usually weighing from 175 to 180 pounds. When stripped, however, his power could in part be accounted for,
his chest being finely developed and
the muscles of his arms, legs and thighs standing out like the sinews of a bear. It was the popular belief that, instead of ordinary ribs, Gardner possessed solid walls of bone on either side of his chest.

Tom's brother John, was in no way noted for his physical prowess, but his sister, Matilda, was so strong that no man was ever able to kiss her in fair, honest play. She declared that she would marry the first man who accomplished this feat. It is said that one of her suitors, Isaac Fuller, was more crafty than the others. He studiously refrained from seeking to capture Matilda's lips until he had won her heart. He courted her at long range and praised her beauty. Then Matilda surrendered.

SOME OF HIS FEATS.

One of the few surviving river men of that period, is John Camber, who now lives at Arthurette, on the Tobique River. He was well acquainted with Gardner, and saw him perform
many of his amazing feats. "There were no two men in my time," said
Mr. Camber, "who could lift Tom Gardner's load or handle him in a scrimmage. In the year 1826, which 350 pounds, under each arm, and once saw him shoulder a barrel of pork

while standing in an ordinary brandy
box. On one occasion Tom was passing through the Meductic Falls on a raft when he saw the crew of the Eel River packet, composed of three men,
vainly endeavoring to pry the packet off a shoal. Tom snubbed his raft in the eddy, waded out so that he could get his shoulder under the bow of the packet and lifted the vessel off the bar.

HE LEFT N. B.

Gardner left the Macnaquac when about 30 years of age, and never returned to New Brunswick. He lived for some years in Upper Canada. The last heard of him by his relatives in New Brunswick was that he had gone to the far west, beyond Salt Lake City.
The following anecdote of this Hercules is taken from an old New York paper:—

"It is commonly reported and believed that Gardner met with a sad
adventure on board a Mississippi steamer. A heavy bell was on board as a portion of the freight, and the captain, a great powerful fellow, was concerned as to how he would remove it from its place in order to make more room on deck. While the captain and passengers were at dinner, Tom, in the presence of the crew, and to their utter amazement, lifted the bell and carried it to the opposite side of the boat. When the captain returned he asked how the bell had been moved,
and when Gardner laughingly remarked that he had carried it there,
the captain gave him the lie, and as one word brought on another, he presently struck Tom in the face. This was too much, and for the first time
in his life the strong man gave blow
for blow. One blow was sufficient.
The captain was knocked down as if kicked by a horse, and never spoke again. Tom made his escape, went west, and has never been heard of since."

When Mr. Camber was shown this paragraph he said that he had heard about Tom lifting a big bell in the States, but not as to the killing of the captain. He thought the latter statement was untrue and had probably arisen from an adventure that Tom had really experienced in Canada.
After Gardner removed to Ontario a noted pugilist there, who heard of his fame as a strong man, insisted on having a fight. Tom tried to avoid trouble in every way, but finally was insulted and a fight took place in which the fistie champion paid the penalty of his rashness with death. He was knocked senseless by a terrific blow, and died a few hours afterward.
Tom then fled to the west.

In the middle of the mate's life in the morning of May 5.

"Hol!" shouted the lookout. The crew were sunning themselves on the ice rail, enjoying a cup of coffee after the hard work of the ship was going like a race. Breakers loomed up ahead. The eddying seas.

"Ship!" shouted the captain, and lands jumped for the halyards. The ship was thrown hard apart, but too late. The ship bumped, ripped open, and before a boat could loose she was among the waves and swept clean by the wickens every moment.

The ship struck against a treacherous reef.

THEY CLIMBED RIGGING.

Knowledge that the ship was in danger and that all lives were in danger over the ship with myswiftness. Passengers and crew of white-faced, struggled to themselves by climbing the rigging.

Women, trembling with the horror, all, climbed to the mizzen-mast, seven of the crew, three passengers followed. They clambered to the mainmast and foremast.

Five minutes the mainmast fell crash over the weather side. He had been clinging to it were into the sea. Wave after wave away the good ship's strength. The good ship's strength supports crumbled, and gave the foremast toppled and fell. Minutes later the mizzen went, all with it, and the last hope of the ship vanished. For the men and women there seemed death ahead. The huge waves, tearing the ship's fragments from the reef, and land was a mile away. "I need a lifebelt," said William, an apprentice, and one survivor, "and I remember else till I found myself floating in the wreckage, and the shore away. I managed to cling to the wreck, where I found Mitchell, and Kirkpatrick.

FOUGHT WITH FAMINE.

He picked up a case of whiskey cans of herring, and got from the strength to make our way on the shore.

At this point the story of the ship is pitiful enough. From the ship's crew to the summit of a mountain, an unspeakably barren place, not a drop of water could be found. The next day Mitchell and I, suffering severely from thirst, as well as from the pain of the ure, made their way along the shore, several miles in the hope of either a human being or some water. Failure added to their bodily weakness. They had not the strength to go to their companions, and spent it under some bushes.

Next day Mitchell and McMillan, but not yet hopeless, set out. McMillan came back to tell of news that a spring had been found. To get a can to fill with it, they never heard from him again. The water that he had discovered. They believed that weakness was his and that he fell from the cliff.

In a day or two, brave scouts came upon Cape Lighthouse. There was no one general use it was found that in many cases horses which would face the smoke of guns using black powder without flinching, flinched and shied at the flash and roar unaccompanied by smoke. Continental opinion is somewhat divided as to the moral effect of smokeless powder on men and horses, but the general conclusion seems to be that in daylight it is not more terrifying than black powder, although some hold that to see men and horses struck down by an invisible agency must necessarily be so. But it is generally agreed that the use of smokeless powder at night has a much more disturbing effect than that of the old powder, because the flashes of the guns, unobscured by smoke, are a great deal more vivid. The fear thus inspired can, however, be overcome by training, but there is another fear which must, in the nature of the case, be felt for the first time on the battlefield, and that is the often uncontrollable terror produced both in men and horses by the whistling of bullets and the screaming and banging of shells. Some authorities have, indeed, said that since the introduction of smokeless powder and the great increase in the range and accuracy of weapons, it would be impossible to keep cavalry in hand under the fire of modern artillery but this is probably an exaggeration.

THEIR CHARACTERISTICS.

Nationality May Be Detected By Manner of Carrying Money.

To the initiated a man's nationality is betrayed by the way he carries his money. The Englishman carries his loose in his right-hand trousers' pocket—gold, silver and copper all mixed up together. He pulls a handful of the mixture out of his pocket in a large, opulent way, and selects the coins he has need of. The American carries his wad of bills in a peculiar long, narrow pocketbook, in which the greenbacks lie flat; the Frenchman makes use of a leather purse with no distinguishing characteristics; while the German uses one gayly embroidered in silks by the fair hands of some Lotchen or Mina. The half-civilized capitalist from some torrid Scotch American city carries his dollars in a belt with cunningly devised pockets to baffle the gentlemen with the light fingers. Some of these belts are very expensive. The Italian of the poorer classes ties up his little fortune in a gayly-colored handkerchief secured with many knots which he secretes in some mysterious manner about his clothes. A similar plan has charms for the Spaniard, while the lower-class Russian exhibits a preference for his boots or the lining of his clothes as a hiding place for his savings.

WORLD BECOMING CROWDED.

Official figures show that the population of every European country goes on increasing rapidly, and that during the past ten years this increase has been at the rate of nearly 10 per cent. The means of maintaining the people are not increasing in like ratio. At the beginning of the present century the population of Europe was put by Levasseur at 175,000,000. In 1880 it was 220,000,000. In 1860 it was 290,000,000, and in 1890 it was 350,000,000. It is now 380,000,000, and the continuance of the present rate of increase will make it 385,000,000 in 1900, 10 per cent. increase over what it was in 1890.

ORIGIN OF THE CIRCUS.

The origin of the modern circus dates back to about 1770, when Philip Astley, a discharged soldier, gave exhibitions of horsemanship in an improvised ring at Lambeth, London.

heart. He courted her at long range and, praised her beauty. Then Matilda surrendered.

SOME OF HIS FEATS.

One of the few surviving river men of that period, is John Camber, who now lives at Arthurette, on the Tobique River. He was well acquainted with Gardner, and saw him perform many of his amazing feats. "There were no two men in my time," said Mr. Camber, "who could lift Tom Gardner's load or handle him in a scrimmage. In the year 1826, which was right after the great Miramichi fire, I saw him at Grafton, opposite Woodstock, lift a molasses puncheon full of corn, said to be fourteen bushels, from the bottom of a towboat to the gunwale, and then set it down on the beach stones. I saw Gardner do one thing which I am satisfied no man in the province could now begin to do. This occurred at Grafton also. He took hold of a rum puncheon containing at the time seven gallons of rum, lifted it from the ground without the least effort and drank from the bung hole. The puncheon was a heavy, iron-bound affair, and must have weighed 120 pounds, not counting the rum. Ed. Wheeler kept a blacksmith shop in those days at East Florenceville. I have seen Gardner borrow a pair of mitts from Ed. and pull horseshoes apart with his hands as fast as he could pick them up. I remember his coming home from a dance one morning, all hands pretty well slewed and carrying on, and hauling up by the roots an apple tree, four inches thick and lugging it all the way home. This I did not actually see myself, but three men who were with him, David Good, Solomon Good and George Lang, told me about it and the tree was replanted on the shore and called Gardner's tree for forty years afterward till it was carried away by a big ice freshet.

HE KEPT A HOTEL.

At one time Gardner kept a kind of hotel or wayside house, below the mouth of Tobique, and two stout Irishmen, each weighing over 200 pounds, who were anxious to tackle him, raised a rumpus in the kitchen. Tom picked them up, one in each hand, knocked their heads together, carried them to the back door, and threw them over the bank of the river. One of the Irishmen was named William Hapenny; the name of the other I have forgotten. The late Edward Campbell of Northampton, was an eye witness of this little fracas. I was in St. John one spring when a famous wrestler from England came here and tried to get on a match with any one who would face him. The raftsmen put up £50 on Tom, who was expected to arrive on a raft next day. Tom knew nothing about wrestling, but easily downed the Englishman, throwing him collar and elbow, side hold and back hold. The Englishman offered him £400 a year if he would go to England and wrestle on the stage. Another famous wrestler came all the way from Miramichi to Tom's house to try a fall with him. Tom was away down river, but his sister, afterward Mrs. Fuller, told the stranger she could throw him herself, and did so three times in succession. The Miramichi man didn't wait for Tom. I have often seen Mrs. Fuller and know that she had wonderful strength. She could shoulder a barrel of flour, and Tom used to say that on side hold she could throw him unless he put out his entire strength.

One of Gardner's notable feats was performed on a wharf in St. John, where he lifted and carried for several steps an anchor weighing 1,350 pounds. The late Jacob McKeen, of Kingsclear, was a witness of this astonishing lift. A sailor named John Hawkins afterward tried to lift the anchor, but failed and died from the effects of his efforts. Mr. McKeen used to say that he had known Gardner, when lifting with a handspike, to break a stout spruce pole five or six inches in diameter. Also, that he had several times seen him carrying a barrel of pork, weighing of furniture.

THEY HESITATE.

I saw a statement in the paper that a German manufacturer has sold an aggregate of 3,000,000 thermometers, said Mr. Manchester. He must be very rich.

It depends upon when he sold, added Mr. Birmingham.

How is that? In winter thermometers are down, while in summer they are up.

REV. DR. TALMAGE SPEAKS OF THE GREAT REAPER.

Story of the Dead Boy—The Charm of Childhood—The Dr. Scouts the Idea That Good Children Always Die—Responsibility of the Sabbath School Teacher—Hannah Lemond's Heroic Rescue of Her Child—An Eloquent Sermon on Childhood.

A despatch from Washington says:—Rev. Dr. Talmage preached from the following text:—"And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers. And he said unto his father, my head, my head! And he said to a lad, carry him to his mother. And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knee till noon, and then died."—11 Kings, iv. 18, 19, 20.

There is at least one happy home in Shunem. To the luxuriance and splendor of a great house, had been given the advent of a child. Even when the Angel of Life brings a new soul to poor man's hut a star of joy shines over the manger. Infancy, with its helplessness and innocence, had passed away. Days of boyhood had come—days of laughter and frolic days of sunshine and promise, days of strange questions and curiosity and quick development. I suppose among all the treasures of that house, the brightest was the boy. One day there is the shout of reapers heard afield. A boy's heart always bounds at the sound of sickle or scythe. No sooner have the harvester's cut a swath across the field than the lad joins them, and the swarthy reapers feel young again as they look down at that lad, as bright and beautiful as was Ruth in the harvest-fields of Bethlehem gleaning after the reapers. But the sun was too hot for him. Congestion of the brain seized on him. I see the swarthy laborers drop their sickles; and they rush out to see what is the matter, and they fan him and they try to cool his brow; but all is of no avail. In the instant of consciousness, he puts his hands against his temples and cries out: "My head! my head!" And the father said: "Carry him to his mother," just as any father would have said; for our hand is too rough, and our voice is too harsh, and our foot is too loud to doctor a sick child, if there be in our home a gentler voice and a gentler hand and a stiller footstep. But all of no avail. While the reapers of Shunem were busy in the field, there came a stronger reaper that way, with keener scythe and for a richer harvest. He reaped only one sheaf, but O what a golden sheaf was that!

The child's beauty does not depend upon form or feature or complexion or apparel. That destitute one that you saw on the street, bruised with unkindness and in rags, has a charm about her, even under her destitution. You have forgotten a great many persons whom you met, of finely cut features and with erect posture and with faultless complexion, while you will always remember the poor girl who, on a cold, moonlight night, as you were passing late home in her thin shawl and bare-foot on the pavement, put out her hand and said: "Please to give me a penny." Ah! how often we have walked on and said: "O, that is nothing but street vagabondism;" but after we got a block or two on, we stopped and said: "Ah, that is not right;" and we passed up that same way, and dropped a mite into the suffering hand, as though it were not a matter of second thought, so ashamed were we of our hard-heartedness. With what admiration we all look upon a group of children

just the time played, whether the dirge of a great sorrow or the anthem of a great joy. The word that the Sabbath school teacher will this afternoon whisper in the ear of the class, will be echoed back from everlasting ages of light or darkness. The home and the school decide the republic or the despotism; the barbarism or the civilization; the upbuilding of an empire, or the overthrowing of it. Higher than Parliament or Congress are the school and the family, and the sound of a child's foot may mean more than the tramp of a host. What, then, are you doing for the purpose of bringing your children into the kingdom of God? If they are so susceptible, and if this is the very best time to act upon their eternal interests, what are you doing by way of right impulsion? There were some harvesters in the fields of Scotland, one hot day; and Hannah Lemond was helping them gather the hay. She laid her babe under a tree. While she was busy in the field, there was a flutter of wings in the air, and a golden eagle clutched the swaddling band of the babe, and flew away with it to the mountain eyrie. All the harvesters and Hannah Lemond started for the cliffs. It was two miles before they came to the foot of the cliff. Getting there who dared to mount the cliff? No human foot had ever trod it. There were sailors there who had gone up the mast in the day of terrible tempest; they did not dare risk it. Hannah Lemond sat there for a while and looked up, and saw the eagle in the eyrie, and then she leaped to her feet, and she started up where no human foot had ever trod, crag above crag, catching hold of this root or that root, until she reached the eyrie and caught her babe, the eagle sweeping in fierceness all around about her. Fastening the child to her back, she started for her friends and for her home. O, what a dizzy descent! sliding from this crag to that crag, catching by that creeper and by that root, coming down further and further to the most dangerous pass, where she found a goat and some kids. She said: "Now I'll follow the goat; the goat will know just which is the safest way down;" and she was led by the animal down to the plane. When she got there, all the people cried: "Thank God, thank God!" her strength not giving away until the rescue was effected. And they cried: "Stand back now. Give her air!" O, if a woman will do that for the physical life of her child, what will you do for the eternal life of your boy and your girl? Let it not be told in the great day of eternity, that Hannah Lemond put forth more exertion for the saving of the physical life of her child than you, O parent, have ever put forth for the eternal life of your little one. God help you!

I pass on to consider the power which a child wields over the parental heart. We often talk about the influence of parents upon children. I never hear anything said about the influence of children upon their parents. You go to school to them. You more educate them than they educate you. With their little hands they have caught hold of your entire nature and you cannot wrench yourself away from their grasp. You are different men and women from what you were before they gave you the first lesson. They have revolutionized your soul. There are fountains of joy in your heart which never would have been discovered had they not discovered them. Life is to you a more stupendous thing than it was before those little feet started on the pathway to eternity. O, how many hopes, how many joys, how many solicitudes that little one has created in your soul. You go to school every day—a school of self-denial, a school of patience, in which you are getting wiser day by day; and that influence of the child over you will increase and increase; and though your children may die, from the very throne of God they will reach down an influence to your soul, leading you on and leading you up until you mingle with their voices and sit beside their thrones.

rest for you, mamma." And then, putting his hands over his heart, he said: "Yes there is rest for me." And then he asked them to read, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, and leadeth me beside still waters;" and he cried out: "O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory?"

Only ten years old! And then he said: "Now I wish you would just turn this bed, so I can look once more on the foliage and see the sun set." And they turned the bed; and he said: "I do so wish that Jesus would hurry and come and take me." They said to him: "Why, are you not willing to await the Lord's time?" "Yes," he said, "I am; but I would rather Jesus would come and hurry and take me." And so, with a peace indescribable, he passed away. O, why need I go so far back? I can only take you this afternoon, at two o'clock, to the obsequies of one little child, who sat last Sabbath in our services and mingled in our songs. She stood up amid that host of 328 new members, and espoused the cause of Christ one Sabbath. Some saw her, perhaps, and thought she was too small; but O, she was ripe for heaven, and the Lord took her. She said to her parent a day or two ago: "Isn't there, mother, a passage that says, 'My grace shall be sufficient for thee?'" And she said: "Lord, make that grace sufficient for father and mother and sister;" and then, speaking of her deceased brother, she said: "I will take Harry by the hand, and we will come out to meet you, mother." O, there is nothing sad about a child's death save the grief in the parent's heart. You see the little ones go right out from a world of sin and suffering to a world of joy. How many sorrows they escape, how many temptations, how many troubles! Children dead are safe. Those that live are in peril. We know not what dark path they may take. The day may come in which they will break your heart; but children dead are safe—safe forever. Weeping parents do not mourn too bitterly over your child that has gone. There are two kinds of prayers made at a child's sick-bed. One prayer the Lord likes; the other prayer He does not like. When a soul kneels down at a child's sick-bed and says: "O Lord, spare this little one; he is very near to my heart; I don't want to part with him; but Thy will be done,"—that is the kind of a prayer the Lord loves. There is another kind of prayer which I have heard men make, in substance when they say: "O Lord, this isn't right; it is hard to take this child; you have no right to take this child; spare this child; I can't give him up, and I won't give him up." The Lord answers that kind of a prayer sometimes. The child lives on and lives on; and travels off in paths of wickedness to perish. At the end of every prayer for a child's life, say: "Thy will, O Lord, be done."

The brightest lights that can be kindled, Christ has kindled. Let us, old and young, rejoice that heaven is gathering up so much that is attractive. In that far land we are not strangers. There are those there who speak our name day by day, and they wonder why so long we tarry. If I could count up the names of all those who have gone out from these families into the kingdom of heaven, it would take me all day to mention their names. A great multitude before the throne. You loved them once; you love them now; and ever and anon you think you hear their voices call you upward. Ah, yes, they have gone out from all these families, and you want no book to tell you of the dying experience of Christian children. You have heard it; it has been whispered in your ear, O father, O mother, O brother, O sister. Toward that good all Christians are bearing. This snapping of heart-strings, this flitting of years, this tread of the heart reminds us that we are passing away. Under spring blossoms, and though summer harvest, and across autumnal leaves, and through the wintry snow-banks, we are passing on. O, rejoice at it,

'The Handwriting on the Wall.'
17-31. Golden Text. Ps. 75.
PRACTICAL NOTES.

Verse 17. Belshazzar, the king associated with his father, Nal on the throne. Nabonidus was himself a descendant of Nebuchadnezzar, but, having come to the throne, he had confirmed his position by making Nabuchadnezzar's daughter his wife, therefore, was a direct descendant of Nebuchadnezzar. Nabonidus's empire, was gradually falling in pieces because of the conquests of the Persians and Belshazzar was hardly more than fifteen years of age when king Nabonidus had left him in charge of the kingdom. He himself having gone to meet the enemy. The first of this chapter tells how Belshazzar's festival day in company with his nobles and his wives and concubines. His calling for the vessels of the temple and using them for a feast were acts of reckless pride. The company were singing and praising to their carved and gilded gods when "in the same hour" the light of the king's hall went out. . . upon the plaster wall of the king's palace." Th so far as we can learn, was ended with the records of the magi of the royal family, and in the of inscriptions of titles, victor exploits comes this terrible m. Numbered, Numbered, Weighed. But neither the king's guests could read it, and in the sternation that ensued the king guessed that Daniel be called king called him and promised him let clothing and a chain of gold emblematic of authority, and the of third ruler in the king himself being the second ruler directly after this promise came Daniel's reply in this verse. Daniel an aged man. The king, Belshazzar, let thy gifts be to thyself, and thy rewards to another. Your and your power will be needed preservation to-night. In this your overthrow throw away on me. Yet I will read the unto the king, and make known the interpretation. Two acts specified throughout this chapter. Evidently the writing itself could be read, the characters probably unfamiliar. The interpretation meaning of the inscription was ly unknown.

18. The most high God. This term which was so constantly to Jehovah that it distinguishes from other gods, and became a proper name. Nebuchadnezzar thy father. Actually his grandfather. A kingdom, and majesty, and honor. The kingdom was one when Nebuchadnezzar took the throne; it was a great one, he parallel for greatness on the earth it was one that carried to the ruler majesty in the eyes of the people, and great earthly glory. 19. For the majesty that him, all people, nations, languages, trembled and feared him. There is not in all life better portraiture of an monarchy than this verse. The tribes of the southwest of Asia were of very diverse children of Shem, Ham, and people of races like the Jews. Arabs mixed with races of Median extraction and many others, each nation had its own language, number of languages once now not only "dead," but unknown, is beyond human calculation. Languages changed re will always remember the poor girl who, on a cold, moonlight night, as you were passing late home, in her thin shawl and bare-foot on the pavement, put out her hand and said: "Please to give me a penny." Ah! how often we have walked on and said: "O, that is nothing but street vagabondism;" but after we got a block or two on, we stopped and said: "Ah, that is not right;" and we passed up that same way and dropped a mite into the suffering hand, as though it were not a matter of second thought, so ashamed were we of our hard-heartedness. With what admiration all look upon a group of children on the play-grounds or in the school; and we clap our hands almost involuntarily, and say: "How beautiful!" All stiffness and dignity are gone, and your shout is heard with theirs, and you trundle their hoop, and fly their kite, and strike their ball, and all your weariness and anxiety are gone as when a child you bounded over the play-ground yourself. That father who stands rigid and unsympathetic amid the sportfulness of children, ought never to have been tempted out of a crusty and unredemable solitariness. The waters leap down the rocks, but they have not the graceful step of childhood. There is something about their forehead that makes you think that the hand of Christ has been on it, saying: "Let this one come to Me, and let it come to Me soon." While that one tarried in the house, you felt there was an angel in the room, and you thought that every sickness would be the last; and when, finally, the winds of death did scatter the leaves, you were no more surprised than to see a star come out above the cloud on a dark night; for you had often said to your companion: "My dear, we shall never raise that child." But I scout the idea that good children always die. Samuel the pious boy, became Samuel the great prophet. Christian Timothy became a minister at Ephesus. Young Daniel, consecrated to God, became prime minister of all the realm, and there are in hundreds of the schools and families of this country to-day, children who love God and keep His Commandments, and who are to be foremost among the Christians and the philanthropists and the reformers of the next half century. The grace of God never kills any one. A child will be more apt to grow up with religion than it will be apt to grow up without it. Length of days is promised to the righteous. The religion of Christ does not cramp the chest or curve the spine or weaken the nerves. There are no malaries floating up from the river of life. The religion of Christ throws over all the heart and life of a child a supernal beauty. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.

I pass on to consider the susceptibility of childhood. Men pride themselves on their unchangeability. They will make an elaborate argument to prove that they think now just as they did twenty years ago. It is charged to frailty or fraud when a man changes his sentiments in politics or in religion, and it is this determination of soul that so often drives back the Gospel from a man's heart. It is so hard to make avarice charitable, and fraud honest, and pride humble, and scepticism Christian. The sword of God's truth seems to glance off from these mailed warriors, and the helmet seems battle-proof against God's battle-axe. But childhood! how susceptible to example and to instruction! You are not surprised at the record: "Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob;" for when religion starts in a family, it is apt to go all through. Jezebel a murderess, you are not surprised to find her son Jehoram attempting assassination. O, what a responsibility upon the parent and the teacher! The musician touches the keys, and the response of those keys is away off amid the pipes and the chords, and you wonder at the distance between the key and the chord. And so it is in life; if you touch a child, the results will come back from manhood or old age, telling to you a more stupendous thing than it was before those little feet started on the pathway to eternity. O, how many hopes, how many joys, how many solitudes that little one has created in your soul. You go to school every day—a school of self-denial, a school of patience, in which you are getting wiser day by day; and that influence of the child over you will increase and increase; and though your children may die, from the very throne of God they will reach down an influence to your soul, leading you on and leading you up until you mingle with their voices and sit beside their thrones.

The grasp which the child has over the parent's heart is seen in what the parent will do for the child. Storm and darkness and heat and cold are nothing to you if they stand between you and your child's welfare. A great lawyer, when yet unknown, one day stood in the court-room and made an eloquent plea before some men of great legal attainments, and a gentleman said to him afterward: "How could you be so calm standing in that august presence?" "O," said Erskine, "I felt my children pulling at my skirts and crying for bread." What stream will you not swim, what cavern will you not enter, what battle will you not fight, what hunger will you not endure for your children? Your children must have bread though you starve. Your children must be well clothed though you go in rags. You say: "My children shall be educated though I never had any chance." What to you are weary limbs and aching head, and hands, hardened and callous, if only the welfare of your children can be wrought out by it? Their sorrow, your sorrow, their joy your joy, their advancement your victory. And O, when the last sickness comes, how you fight back the march of disease, and it is only after a tremendous struggle that you surrender. And when the spirit has fled, the great deep is broken up, and Rachel will not be comforted, because her children are not, and David goes up the palace stairs crying: "O Absalom, my son, my son, would God I had died for thee. O Absalom, my son, my son."

There is not a large family, or hardly a large family in this church to-day that has not bent over such a treasure and lost it. In the family fold is there no dead lamb? I have seen many such cases of sorrow. There is one pre-eminent in my memory as pastor—Scoville Haynes McCallum. The story of his death has brought hundreds unto God. He belonged to my parish in the West. A thorough boy, nine or ten years of age. Nothing morbid, nothing dull about him. His voice loudest and his foot swiftest on the playground. Often he has come into my house and thrown himself on the floor in an exhaustion of boisterous mirth; and yet he was a Christian, consecrated to God, keeping His commandments. That is the kind of childish piety I believe in. When the days of sickness came suddenly and he was told that he could not get well, he said: "Jesus alone can save me. Jesus will save me. He has saved me. Don't cry, mamma. I shall go right straight up to heaven." And then they gave him a glass of water to cool his hot lips he said: "Mamma, I shall take a draught from the water of life after awhile, of which if one drink he shall never get thirsty again. I lay myself at Jesus' feet and I want Him to do just what He thinks best to do with me." In those days, "Rest for the Weary" was a new hymn, and he had learned it, and in a perfect ecstasy of soul, in his last hour, he cried out:

"In the Christian's home in glory
There remains a land of rest;
There my Savie's gone before me
To fulfill my soul's request;
There is rest for the weary,
There is rest for you."

"Sing, O sing, ye hairs of glory,
Shout your triumphs as you go,
Zion's gates are open for you,
You shall find an entrance through,
There is rest for the weary,

"There is rest for you, papa; there is

you love them now, and ever and anon you think you hear their voices calling you upward. Ah, yes, they have gone out from all these families, and you want no book to tell you of the dying experience of Christian children. You have heard it; it has been whispered in your ear, O father, O mother, O brother, O sister. Toward that good all Christians are bearing. This snapping of heart-strings, this flight of years, this tread of the heart reminds us that we are passing away. Under spring blossoms, and though summer harvest, and across autumnal leaves, and through the wintry snow-banks, we are passing on. O, rejoice at it, children of God, rejoice at it! How shall we gather them up, the loved and the lost! Before we mount our throne, before we drink from the fountain, before we strike the harp of our eternal celebration, we will cry out: "Where are our loved and lost?" And then, how we shall gather them up! O, now we shall gather them up!

"In this dark world of sin and pain
We only meet to part again;
But when we reach the heavenly shore
We there shall meet to part no more."

"The hope that we shall see that day
Should chase our present griefs away;
When these short years of pain are past
We'll meet before the throne at last."

GIFTS TO THE POPE.

His Holiness Has Been Frequently the Recipient of Costly Presents.

"He has been a pretty good man," remarked the informal President Paul Kruger of the Transvaal, "and I think I will send him a present."

Following this remark, Oom Paul purchased the biggest diamond in the world, worth at least $1,000,000 and sent it as a gift to Pope Leo XIII., to illuminate his last days in the Vatican.

In twenty years the Pope has received $10,000,000 in diamonds.

The ruby and diamond ring given him by the Sultan cost $100,000, and the jewelled toilet service presented to him by the Shah of Persia cost $700,000.

On one occasion Queen Victoria being specially grateful to his Holiness for a favour, sent him a pectoral cross with a single large diamond in the centre valued at $200,000.

Another time the Catholics of the United States made up a purse and sent a diamond worth $20,000.

During his life the Pope has received gifts worth not less than $30,000,000.

The Emperor of Austria gave him recently a gold casket, largely traced in precious enamels. The casket was valued at $100,000, yet it contained nothing. The Pope used the casket for his diamond crosses. Three magnificent pieces reposed in the casket. One of these was the United States' cross, another was the Victoria cross, and another was a cross sent him from one of the richest women in the United States, who spent $150,000 for a plain gold cross with diamonds at the points.

The Queen Regent of Spain, wishing to remember his Holiness, purchased with money out of the royal coffers a chalice for $200,000 and in the chalice little Alphonso laid the largest diamond he owned. The Spanish Cabinet allowed him to present it to the Pope, and his own baby fingers selected it.

Besides these beautiful presents, the Pope has received many contributions in solid gold. One of these, during the Queen's Jubilee amounted to $3,000,000, and on his birthday a year ago, he received $200,000 in gold pieces. None of this money has been spent by the Pope, and it is thought he has some project for disposing of it at his death.

In legacies during the last 20 years the Pope has received from wealthy Catholics a gift of $22,000,000, and in moneyed gifts from individuals he has received $4,000,000.

PRACTICAL NOTES.

Verse 17. Belshazzar, the king, was associated with his father, Nabonidus, the throne. Nabonidus was not self a descendant of Nebuchadnezzar, but, having come to the throne confirmed his position by marrying Nebuchadnezzar's daughter. Belshazzar, therefore, was a direct descendant of Nebuchadnezzar. Nabonidus' empire, was gradually crumbling in pieces because of the steady assaults of the Persians and Medes. Belshazzar was hardly more than seven years of age when killed. Nabonidus had left him in charge of Babylon, he himself having gone forth to the enemy. The first part of chapter tells how Belshazzar kept a festival day in company with his wives and his wives and concubines, calling for the vessels taken out of the temple and using them in the same acts of reckless profanity. The company were singing and shouting praises to their carved and painted idols when "in the same hour came the fingers of a man's hand, and the wall upon the plaster of the king's palace." That wall, as we can learn, was emblazoned with the records of the magnificence of the royal family, and in the midst of inscriptions of titles, victories, and its comes this terrible message—Numbered, Weighed, Divided. But neither the king nor the scribes could read it, and in the confusion that ensued the queen suggested that Daniel be called. The king called him and promised him scarlet clothing and a chain of gold, emblematic of authority, and the position of third ruler in the kingdom, he himself being the second ruler. Immediately after this promise comes Daniel's reply in this verse. Daniel, now a young man. The king, Belshazzar, gave gifts to himself, and gave rewards to another. Your wealth and power will be needed for self-justification to-night. In this hour of overthrow throw away no gifts, O king, and make known to him the interpretation. Two acts which are tied throughout this narrative. The writing itself could not read, the characters probably unfamiliar. The interpretation or reading of the inscription was equally unknown.

The most high God. This was a which was so constantly applied to him that it distinguished him from other gods, and became gradually a proper name. Nebuchadnezzar's father. Actually his grandfather. The kingdom was a new when Nebuchadnezzar took it in; it was a great one, having no equal for greatness on the earth; it was one that carried to its chief majesty in the eyes of its subjects and great earthly glory. For the majesty that he gave to all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him. There is not in all literature a portrait of an absolute monarch so rich in these presents. The southwestern corner of the world were of very diverse origin, the Semites, Hamites, and Japhethites, of races like the Jews and the mixed with races of Mongolian origin and many others, and each had its own language. The diversity of languages once spoken, not only "dead," but absolutely unknown, is beyond human computation. Languages changed rapidly in the days before national literature also, of Finished, Weighed, and Divided.

26. This is the interpretation of the thing. We have seen that the characters were probably unfamiliar to the Chaldean wise men. When read the actual meaning of the words may have been plain, but not their interpretation, or, as we would say, application. Men used twice means numbered—that is, completely counted—and the application is, that God has, if we may venture on such a comparison, kept a day book of Belshazzar's reign, and made an entry creditable or discreditable of every act. The record is closed now, and the summer up of the account is altogether against Belshazzar.

27. Tekel means weighed, and the application is, Belshazzar has been weighed in the balances, and found wanting. In almost every age and language the action of the human mind in deliberation has been compared to weighing. The scales of justice had been in the hands of the king himself, but he had misused them. Now he is weighed in them, and found worthless. The "balances" by which men are judged and their fate fixed are not their own opinion of themselves nor the world's estimate of them, but the impartial judgment of the Lord.

28. Peres. Broken up or divided. The application is, Thy kingdom is broken up, and its pieces now belong to the Medes and Persians. Belshazzar's kingdom is divided, or severed from him, and passed over to the Persians.

29. Belshazzar. . . clothed Daniel with scarlet. Restored the old prophet to the rank which he had held under Nebuchadnezzar. The young king could not now avert the temporal results of the vicious government of himself and his ancestors, but he could at least act with a kingly integrity, and he did. The gift of the scarlet robe was as we have seen, a sign of rank, like the yellow jacket of the Chinese man. Throughout the East the present of a dress from a prince is a high honor. A chain of gold was also an emblem of office. Made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom. This was the fact of dignity which the other two were the emblems of. This promotion of Daniel was of no service so far as Belshazzar's own rule was concerned, but it must have had several glorious results for Daniel himself and for the cause he represented.

30. In that night was Belshazzar slain. Classic writers tell us of the suddenness of Babylon's overthrow. Cyrus's armies were guided by two Babylonian deserters.

31. Darius the Median took the kingdom. This Darius is probably the man known to other writers by the name of Astyages. He was really grandfather of Cyrus. Cyrus had practically dethroned him, but treated him kindly afterward and allowed him royal honors.

"Boer Money" Included in English School Teachers' Emoluments.

Canadian school teachers will find much of interest in two advertisements from one of the London papers, one for a school mistress. Not a few of the bright young women who teach in the Canadian schools might be troubled at the prospect of having to teach knitting, and how many of them would be able to play the harmonium? That board should be included will not surprise them, but to have it distinctly specified that the board was "without beer" would seem strange; yet that is the way in which it appears in the following advertisements:

"Parish of Brighton—Certificated schoolmistress wanted—The Guardians are about to appoint a schoolmistress for the girls' department of the

THE VINE WITH THE PINK FLOWERS

"Uncle Pardon shall never leave his money out of the family," said Miss Millie Dean.

She said it half a dozen times a day, on an average, in the hearing of Emma Rane, who had never yet seemed to take in the hidden meaning.

Emma had a delicate, reserved face, of great sweetness, yet having a certain power of hiding any strong emotion of which the tender heart was capable. And they were not Dean features—those exquisite lines and curves. The Dean features were strong and aggressive. From a child, Emma had secretly experienced a feeling of dread when viewing Miss Millie's nose in profile.

She had come to the Willows, Pardon Dean's fine farm, when but nine years old. A younger sister of his—a sweet childish woman—had adopted the girl when an infant, and had loved and cherished Emma as long as she had a husband and a home.

Losing both in a terrible conflagration, she returned to the farm where she had passed her youth, and, dying soon after, left this little daughter of her adoption to the tender mercies of her brother and sister.

Pardon Dean was an eccentric man, far advanced in years. Millie was a hard, unloving woman, between forty and fifty, stiff in her notions, immovable in her prejudices. From the time Millie was brought to the Willows, she had looked upon the girl as an interloper. Yet, when Lucy died, Millie promised that she would take care of the child until old enough to take care of herself.

More than a decent living she never meant Emma to have. As she said:

"Uncle Pardon's money should never go out of the family."

For there were children of another brother to inherit the patrimony—a family of five, all Deans to the backbone.

As for Uncle Pardon, as he was called, he made no demonstration regarding Emma until the child had lived with him a year. Always quiet and sensitive, she grieved long for her adopted mother, and under the rule of Miss Millie she grew quiet and sad. The cold, harsh woman never found opportunity to punish her with blows, but frowned so ominously on the slightest mishap that the whole existence of the child was darkened.

When about ten years old Emma accidentally terribly scalded her little hands with a pail of boiling water; and Miss Millie was about to rush upon the poor child and punish her for her irrepressible screams when Uncle Pardon caught Emma up, and murmuring, "Poor little dove—poor little dove!" plunged her hands into a bowl of sweet oil, thus relieving her anguish.

Miss Millie stood aghast. Not but what she would have applied means of alleviation, if the child had patiently awaited her leisure, but she instinctively resisted any demand made upon her by the little alien; and when her brother showed not only solicitude, but tenderness, she was astounded and enraged. The next morning when he asked how the child was, she retorted:

"She is well enough. So you have adopted her, too, have you? You will be leaving her your money next."

"I shall do as I please about that," he replied, slowly adding, as he rose from the breakfast table: "I think it is

"Umph! you had better talk to somebody who can't see. You can't cheat me about what's going on before my eyes every day. You and Uncle Pardon are as thick as can be behind my back; but you needn't think I wear him from his own flesh and blood."

"Hold your tongue!" harshly interrupted another voice. "Let the girl alone! As for you, Emma, if you want to marry young Lane, tell him that when I die I will leave you a pot of gold; for you deserve it, if ever a girl did."

"You shall not!" screamed Miss Millie.

"I will!" shouted old Pardon.

That night the old man was stricken with paralysis. It was the third time he had been thus attacked, and the doctor said he could not recover from it; but he partially recovered, and lingered some weeks.

"Don't you dare send Emma away," he muttered, thickly, to Miss Millie. "Let her come in here every day and water the plants. I want to see her."

Miss Millie could have killed her brother, but she dared not refuse him in vain Miss Millie frowned. At last she said:

"I will find his will, and see what he has left her."

So she commenced a furtive search in desks and drawers, in cupboards, trunks, and boxes, she carefully searched, and at last discovered, in a partition of her eccentric brother's tool-box, the important document.

It was eminently satisfactory. House and lands, and money he had left to the Deans.

She put the paper back carefully. "It is all right. He has left her nothing!" she cried, triumphantly.

As for Uncle Pardon, he seemed to care for nothing but to be undisturbed among his plants. One, a beautiful foreign vine, with pink blossoms he had suspended close to his bed—so near that Emma was obliged to water it very carefully, lest the moisture should drip upon the sheets.

Her heart ached in these last days on earth of her kind old friend. How many a dark hour his smiles of indulgence had brightened! What a power, not to be overthrown, was he in that austere household! And now he was slowly fading out of it.

Almost helpless, and half insensible he lay among the pillows, and his hours were numbered.

Dr. Lane was far from her, too. An epidemic had appeared in an adjoining town, and he had been sent for three weeks previously, and had not returned.

One night old Pardon grew restless. A doctor was at his bedside. Miss Millie bent over him, and there were servants in the room.

"I am going. I give Emma the vine with the pink flowers. Transplant it in the spring child. Good-bye—good-bye!"

And, the ebbing tide of life falling suddenly, Uncle Pardon was dead.

While he lay composed in his grave clothes, Emma, after pressing a caressing hand on the cold brow, which she could hardly see for her blinding tears reached up and took down the pot of pink blossoms. Turning, she met Miss Millie's triumphant smile.

"I wish you joy of your inheritance," the woman said.

"I am glad to have it; I want nothing more," sobbed Emma.

Perhaps the hard woman was rebuked by the young girl's sincere grief for she uttered no more taunts for days.

On the day of the funeral Dr. Lane hurried to the Willows.

"I could not come before," he said to Emma. "What did Uncle Pardon leave you, Emma?"

"You, too?" she asked, reproachfully. "He left me the memory of much kindness, and a pot of pink-blossomed vines which was long in his room."

"It is well," was Lily's only answer.

His prospects had brightened. He had won friends in the adjoining town where he had labored faithfully among the sick and dying, and had been invited to settle among them. So he took Emma from her lonely home at

That board should be included will not surprise them, but to have it distinctly specified that the board was "without beer" would seem strange; yet that is the way in which it appears in the following advertisements:

"Parish of Brighton—Certificated schoolmistress wanted—The Guardians are about to appoint a schoolmistress for the girls' department of the Warren Farm Schools, at a commencing salary of £50 per annum, rising £5 annually to a maximum of £60, with board, except beer, lodging and washing, and such additional sum as may be awarded on the certificate of the local Government Board.

"The salary and emoluments, the latter valued as £40 per year, will both be subject to deduction under the P.C. Law Officers' Superannuation act, 1896.

"The person appointed will be required to undertake the supervision of the girls, both in and out of school, and take a lively interest in their welfare. Must be a member of the Established Church, able to give instruction in the usual subjects, including musical drill, sewing, knitting and singing, as set forth in the code of the Education Department, and hold a certificate from the Privy Council or the Local Government Board. Preference will be given to a candidate who can play the harmonium."

In the case of the man teacher advertised for, he is a little more fortunate, for, while he gets no beer with his board he gets £5 extra "in lieu of beer money," as is shown by the following advertisement.

"North Surrey District School, Anerley, S. Miss Millie stood aghast. Not but what she would have applied means of alleviation, if the child had patiently awaited her leisure, but she instinctively resisted any demand made upon her by the little alien; and when her brother showed not only solicitude, but tenderness, she was astounded and enraged. The next morning when he asked how the child was, she retorted:

"She is well enough. So you have adopted her, too, have you? You will be leaving her your money next."

"I shall do as I please about that," he replied, slowly adding, as he rose from the breakfast table: "I think it is likely I shall leave her a pot of gold."

Miss Millie was uncertain how much of earnest there was in this, but she feared—the very much feared—that the eccentric old man, as self-willed as herself, had found a soft spot in his heart for the little white face and blue eyes. Do as she would, she could not help Emma growing up pretty and a lady. The beauty was irrepressible, the refinement innate. Clad in the coarsest homespun, the slender feet disguised in coarse, ill-fitting shoes, the sweet voice and fair face would yet attract a beholder; and, in cautious crumbs and snatches, old Pardon gave her his heart.

Emma soon learned that he loved her, and she loved him warmly in return; but, both dreading domestic storms, they never demonstrated affection in Miss Millie's presence.

But while Emma's life was sweetened by the feeling that she had one friend, the woman's was embittered by the fear that her favorite nephews—all Deans—would lose a penny of the Dean fortune.

When Emma was sixteen she would have been driven from the house to earn her own living, but that Linly Lane came to the Willows, and then and there fell in love with her, so that Miss Millie said in her heart:

"It is well. Let him marry her and take her out of the way. That will save all gossip and notoriety."

For she knew that the neighbors whispered among themselves:

"She is hard on Emma Rane!"

"As for Linly Lane, he was just such a hearty, generous, handsome fellow as gentle, loving girls adore; and it seemed to Emma that a whole joyous spring, full of sunshine, flowers, and bird song, had suddenly come into her life, when he told her that he loved her; but they were poorer than any pair of robins in the orchard, for they had nothing to build their nest of."

"If you want her," said Miss Millie, grimly, "take her."

"But I have no practice yet, and no home," said young Dr. Lane. "If Mr. Dean would like to help us a little, however, I would gladly make a beginning, and have no doubt but that we should succeed finely."

"Uncle Pardon's money never shall go out of the family!" snapped Miss Millie.

Seeing how matters lay in this direction, Dr. Lane simply replied:

"Then I cannot marry at present."

He was satisfied, however, that Uncle Pardon had warmer feelings for Emma, and believed that a more generous response could be elicited from the old man.

As for Emma, he knew that she had so brightened her life that she was now comparatively content, and he prepared to commence his practice hopefully.

But there were two older and well established physicians in the town; and at first it was up-hill work.

And at this time Miss Millie showed a spirit utterly venomous.

"That fellow isn't going to marry you, Emma Rane, and you had better go somewhere and earn your living, instead of waiting here for Uncle Pardon's money," she said.

"I am not waiting for Uncle Pardon's money," answered Emma, her gentle eyes flashing with indignation. "I do not want his money. I am willing to go away, and prefer earning my own living. As for Dr. Lane, we—we shall be married some day, when he is better off," with a maidenly blush on her pure cheek.

ed by the young girl's sincere grief, for she uttered no more taunts for days.

On the day of the funeral Dr. Lane hurried to the Willows.

"I could not come before," he said to Emma. "What did Uncle Pardon leave you, Emma?"

"You, too?" she asked, reproachfully.

"He left me the memory of much kindness, and a pot of pink-blossomed vines which was long in his room."

"It is well," was Linly's only answer.

His prospects had brightened. He had won friends in the adjoining town, where he had labored faithfully among the sick and dying, and had been invited to settle among them. So he took Emma from her lonely home at the Willows, and they commenced their married life in the prettiest of little cottages.

In a sunny bay window the pink-flowered vine was hung, but it gradually lost its rosy blossoms and drooped.

"Uncle Pardon told me to transplant it in the spring," said Emma, one fine March day. "I must do so, or it will die."

She carefully removed the root and turned out the earth, and then, wonderful to see, the pot was lined with gold, so that in a short time she had counted a thousand five-dollar gold pieces.

"I knew it was so, or I guessed at it," said her husband. "I was sure he would outwit that woman."

But Emma had no feeling of triumph. She only sobbed gratefully.

"Dear Uncle Pardon. He meant to take care of me, after all, though I was not one of the family."

Invested wisely, the money laid the foundation of a fortune.

CENSUS OF INSECTS IS TAKEN.

There Are Good, Bad and Indifferent, and Comprise 300 Families.

An insect census has just been taken on pure scientific lines, with a view to determine as far as it is possible which insects are a boon and a blessing to mankind and which are the reverse.

Although the statistics quite upset the old idea that all insects and the lower animals were created solely for man's benefit, yet it is conclusively proved that while some insects are rightly termed "pests," there are others that render us considerable service, and fortunately for our crops and vegetation the latter are in the majority.

According to the census insects are to be classified as good, bad and indifferent; the good insects amount to 116 families, the bad insects amount to 113 families, while the indifferent insects, who could not for one reason or another satisfactorily answer all the questions on their census papers, and must, therefore, for the present, be looked upon as doubtful characters, reach a total of seventy-two families.

No fewer than 112 families of the bad or injurious insects feed upon cultivated plants and crops, doing damage to and devouring thousands of pounds' worth of vegetable produce, annually gobbling up our spring cabbages and succulent young peas, etc., in the most ruthless fashion, while the one hundred and thirteenth family is parasitic upon and causes much harm to warm-blooded animals.

Of the good or beneficial insects, seventy-nine families devote themselves to the destruction of their wicked, vegetable-devouring brethren, which they accomplish in a most satisfactory and wholesale manner, while of the remaining useful insects, thirty-two families act as scavengers, clearing away with great rapidity all sorts of decaying vegetable and animal matter, two families aid us as pollensiers and three form food for our eatable fishes.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1899

OUR OTTAWA LETTER.

The threatened obstruction to the Redistribution bill has completely fizzled out. The block which was to last until Christmas according to the threats of Sir Charles Tupper and his section of the Opposition died in early infancy, for the better councils of the Foster section prevailed, and the bill was allowed to pass with a little more than a formal protest. It is now in the hands of the Senate and there are of course all manners of rumours about as to what that august body is going to do with it. It is scarcely conceivable, notwithstanding the many follies of the past, that the worthy Senators will so recklessly aggravate public sentiment by throwing out a measure which even Conservative members admit is fair and honest, except when they are called the house he now occupies here. Though compelled of course to accept the Premier's denial Mr. Taylor did so with about as much grace and good taste as he had shown in making the original charge; the only excuse that he could offer for his despicable conduct being that it was a street rumor and he believed it. Mr. Taylor is but a light weight and has offended friends and opponents alike by this ridiculous episode.

AN UNDIGNIFIED OPPOSITION.

The above incident would perhaps be scarcely worth this much attention were it not characteristic of too much of what has been going on this session. It must be confessed that the general attitude of the Opposition has not been conducive to the dignity and prestige of Parliament. The gentlemen on Mr. Speaker's left appear to have lost sight of the fact that the reputation of the House may suffer at their hands and that there is a responsibility attaching to the Opposition equally with the Government.

It cannot be denied that their position is a somewhat trying one; to witness the unbroken success which has attended the present administration throughout its entire term of office is naturally galling to those who had thoroughly convinced themselves that a Liberal Government could not last six months, but it is always the part of wisdom to submit gracefully to the inevitable, and it would certainly make things much pleasanter all round if they would only recognize this fact and act upon it.

MR. SIFTON SCORES AGAIN.

The pursuit of Mr. Sifton is not meeting with very startling success. Last session Sir Hibbert Tupper presented a sensational bill of indictment in connection with the alleged misappropriation of Federal funds in connection with the election frauds in Manitoba in 1896, an indictment which inter alia, accused the Minister of the Interior with using public monies for his own benefit. Having failed to discover one tittle of evidence in support of this charge last session Sir Hibbert was allowed to keep the inquiry open until this session, but now, having been assisted in every possible way by the Government in securing evidence and returns wherever he has requested them, he has dropped the whole business; thereby admitting that he has had mighty small reason for the course he pursued. This retreat, following so closely upon the reluctant admission that he had no grounds for those personal charges against the Minister, which were contained in the notorious indictment of the Yukon administration, will surely be accepted as conclusive evidence of recklessness which has characterized the attitude of the Opposition throughout.

LOCALS IN MANITOBA

The Conservatives in Manitoba have prepared a platform upon which to fight the approaching Local general election. It is comprehensive enough to satisfy the most exacting, but it is so general and indefinite as to make one doubtful whether even the formulæ of it expected it to be accepted in any other than an ethical sense. Many of the nineteen planks may not only be accepted at their face value, but they have been for many years in the working programme of the present administration.

Surely for instance it would be difficult to find a Government that has premonition of what was coming—their last adieus at the Capital were exchanged in the fullest expectations of an early return to active duty and few men in either House would by general consent have been given a longer lease of life.

THE FARMER OF NEW ONTARIO.

It is only within the last ten or twelve years that older Canada has realized that those vast stretches of country north and west of Lake Superior were worth anything from a commercial standpoint. When the famous boundary dispute was on, and the Provincial Government of Ontario was fighting for the possession of a large portion of this territory, it is a great question whether the majority of the electorate believed the country was worth fighting for at all. Even the best informed thought only of its mineral and lumber resources. They believed it had a commercial value on account of the hidden treasures of the mine and the practically illimitable forests, but beyond this there was nothing, in their estimation, that would make the country worth the cost of holding.

The Legislative Tourists however have been thoroughly disabused on this point. They have found, as the result of their two weeks peregrinations, that there are thousands upon thousands of acres of excellent agricultural country scattered all over a district three hundred miles long from Port Arthur to the Provincial boundary and from fifty to one hundred miles wide from the International boundary to some distance north of the C.P.R. tracks. Not, of course, that the whole country within these limits is good agricultural land; very far from it, but there are, scattered here and there throughout the district, sections containing hundreds of thousands of acres of land easily cleared and cultivated, that will produce as good grain, as fine vegetables and as excellent hay, as any farm in old Ontario. An example of this was found in the valley of the Slate River some twenty miles back of Fort William, a section where the local authorities are anxious to locate a colony of Doukhobors, and where the Tourists saw for themselves what was being done to cultivate the virgin soil. Farms could there be seen on every hand producing heavy crops, provided with first class modern buildings and stocked with horses and cattle that would hold their own in any market. Better and more direct roads to the nearest market was the one thing that the settler asked for and those who heard the demand realized the necessity.

Going west from Fort William the Tourists found more than one point where the industrious and thrifty farmer was giving a good account of himself. Between the Fort and

It is scarcely conceivable, notwithstanding the many follies of the past, that the worthy Senators will so recklessly aggravate public sentiment by throwing out a measure which even Conservative members admit is fair and honest, except when they are called upon in their partisan capacity to oppose it in the House.

AN OUTRAGEOUS INCIDENT.

No incident has occurred during the present session of Parliament, or indeed many sessions that has aroused such a spontaneous outburst of indignation on all hands as did the statement made the other night by Mr. Taylor, the Conservative Whip, to the effect that a leading wholesale house in this city had bribed Sir Wilfred Laurier to grant them special favors by presenting him with a furnished residence. The man who was mean enough to give tongue to such an unwarrantable slander, was also cowardly enough to make the assertion in the absence of the Prime Minister, so that publicity might be given thereto a day ahead of any reply Sir Wilfred might deign to make. Had the Premier treated the scurrilous attack with contemptuous silence, it would have been about what it deserves, but he thought well to notice it and he has done so not only by an absolute denial, in toto, but also with a statement of exactly how he became possessed of election. It is comprehensive enough to satisfy the most exacting, but it is so general and indefinite as to make one doubtful whether even the formulatores of it expected it to be accepted in any other than an ethical sense. Many of the nineteen planks may not only be accepted at their face value, but they have been for many years in the working programme of the present administration.

Surely for instance it would be difficult to find a Government that has been more insistent in upholding Provincial rights against Federal interference or one that has upheld more strenuously the principle that the Province should be allowed to manage its own affairs; no Government has shown itself more alive to the necessity of developing the railways in its territory; in no part of the Dominion has the growing temperance sentiment of the country received greater encouragement; the educational needs of the people are nowhere more liberally provided for; the fullest encouragement has been given to the immigration of a desirable class of settlers, and the machinery of the Government has been operated at a decreasing cost in the face of the rapidly increasing requirements. These points comprise about all that is practical in the platform. The balance of the programme offers little that will encourage the electors to turn out a Government which has a clean honest progressive record of twelve years duration, and put in its place, untried and inexperienced men.

THE EFFECT OF REDUCED POSTAGE.

The very satisfactory statement is made that the business of the Post Office Department is increasing so rapidly as the result of the reduction in the postal rates that a year or two from hence any temporary deficit that may at first be created will be wiped out. This reform is so widespread in its effects that it should not be regarded from a party standpoint at all, and it is gratifying to find so prominent a citizen as Mr. D. R. Wilkie, General Manager of the Imperial Bank of Canada a man very closely in touch with the commercial life of the country, referring to the matter in the following terms in the course of an address to the shareholders of his bank:—"Having last year, and on previous occasions, referred to matters of public interest, and particularly to the subject of Imperial and domestic postage, I cannot refrain from expressing the appreciation which I have no doubt we all entertain of the policy which has been pursued, and the reduction in the postage rates brought about within the last twelve months. Entirely apart from the social part of the question, —not an unimportant one,—I am confident that the business of the country has been very much facilitated through the reduced rates, and that the net revenue to the Government will not eventually suffer.

THE GRIM REAPER.

The tragic death of the Senator Sanford in Muskoka followed by the sudden and, it is to be feared fatal sickness of Hon. W. B. Ives, has cast a gloom over Parliamentary circles, for both men stood high in the councils of their party and were warmly esteemed by friends and opponents alike for their excellent qualities of head and heart. The circumstances in each case were peculiarly pathetic and intensify the regrets which have been called forth; neither man received any seen on every hand producing heavy crops, provided with first class modern buildings and stocked with horses and cattle that would hold their own in any market. Better and more direct roads to the nearest market was the one thing that the settler asked for and those who heard the demand realized the necessity.

Going west from Fort William the Tourists found more than one point where the industrious and thrifty farmer was giving a good account of himself. Between the Fort and Rat Portage the principal point is of course Dryden, where the Local Government has established a dairy farm with good results, and where some six hundred farms aggregating from 30,000 to 35,000 acres are under cultivation. Immediately around Rat Portage one hears of nothing but mining, but after crossing Lake of the Woods and entering the Rainy River, there is a stretch of about a hundred miles along the Canadian bank, the greater part of which is cut up into thriving and highly cultivated farms. The depth of this strip of cultivated territory back from the river bank varies from half a mile to twenty miles, and even more but there are tens of thousands of acres further back that will be quickly settled when means of outside communication are secured. At present the river is the only highway, there are no wagon roads and no railroads, and the pioneer settler is cut off from the outside world either to get in his supplies or to get out the products of his farm. It is this great district that the Ontario and Rainy River Railway, of which more will be said in a subsequent article, will serve. By its facilities will be given to develop the countless mining propositions all through that section, to take in machinery and supplies which will lead to the formation of innumerable camps and the locating of thousands of miners, thus creating a ready local market for the product of the dairy and the farm as well as greatly increasing the market for manufactured goods from the outside.

How Faraday Refused a Pension.

Lord Melbourne once announced to Faraday that it was his pleasing duty to offer him a pension, but, he added, "I suppose all this science is humbug." Faraday at once replied, "If that is your opinion, my lord, I decline the pension," and retired. Melbourne, on meeting some of his colleagues, said: "I have had a strange thing happen. A man has declined a pension." But these gentlemen knew Faraday's position and reputation better than the premier and urged him to rectify the blunder. Faraday was again interviewed, but Melbourne was obliged to retract and apologize before the pension was accepted.

I found it difficult to sleep, and little I did get was often broken by horrid dreams. Intense suffering, liver complaint added to my load, and I also had dizziness, pains in the head and was pale, haggard and despondent. "I kept doctoring and dosing deriving the slightest benefit, and gave up all hope of getting well. My daughter, who had read of a cure by Paine's Celery Compound, urged me to try one bottle of the medicine. I told her it was no use to throw money, but she pleaded so hard, please her I bought a bottle, and it was used up I felt better. Encouraged, I continued with the medicine and improved every day. "I am now cured, thanks to Paine's Celery Compound. You cannot that I consider Paine's Celery Compound the greatest medical discovery of the world. I urge all who are suffering from these troubles to try this grand medicine and virtues."

Some Odd Words.

"Topsy turvy"—when things are upside down, they are said to be topsy turvy, an expression derived from the fact that turf for fuel is placed on its being cut. The surface of the earth is pared off with the heath growing, and the heath is turned downward, and some days in that state the earth may get dry before it is away. It means, therefore, real side turf way.

"Coxcomb" is a corruption of cock, which is considered as an unsightly part and is always cut off in game birds and only suffered to remain in those of the barnyard breed. Hercock is a ridiculous fellow, who draws more attention to the decoration of his person than to the improvement of his mind.

"Hurly burly" denotes confusion and is said to owe its origin to neighboring families, Hurleigh and Leigh, who filled their part of the world with contest of violence.—Chicago Tribune.

Summer Health.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND
Only Medicine That Restores the Blessings of True Health.

Interesting Testimony from a Cured Man.

I have entered into the oppressive
midsummer and find yourself
from dyspepsia, liver and kidneys, pain in back and side, headaches, and stomach disorders,
urge you to give Paine's Celery Compound a fair and honest trial if you are healthy and happy. We fully appreciate the seriousness of your condition,
and a desire for your physical welfare
impels Paine's Celery Compound, medicine that is now doing such a valuable work for thousands of sufferers
everywhere. If your doctor is unfatigable professional etiquette, he will urge you to use the great life giving medicine and neighbors will be pleased to see what it has done for them in cases of distress and agony.

Charles Comeau, of Neguac, N. B., writes: "I suffered from dyspepsia and liver troubles for years, while living in Black River. It was a complication of dyspepsia and was so bad with dyspepsia
that I could not touch a morsel of food.
It was difficult to sleep, and what little I did get was often broken with dreams. Intense sufferings from dyspepsia added to my load of agony."

DREYFUS.

A short time from now will see the Dreyfus affair, that has been convulsing France, brought to a definite issue. It is not necessary to anticipate what the result of the revision of the sentence that condemned him
may be, but it is profitable to know how intelligent Frenchmen regard the situation, and where they place the blame, or perhaps I should say crime,
of the agitation of the past two years.
Speaking in Paris on June 19, M.
Maxime Lecomte, the leader of the Democratic Left in the French Senate, said:

"We have reached a critical period
of our history, and, as representatives of the country, we are sensible of our responsibilities.... It cannot be disguised that a struggle, bitter and unremitting, is going on between the abuses bequeathed by the past and the aspirations for a better future, between the spirit of the French Revolution and the spirit of reaction. We reprobate
the intrigues of those who try to monopolize patriotism, and to make the cultus of the army a reactionary force. Such an enterprise was conceivable before the conscription
brought into the army the whole body of citizens. It might then be said that the army was for or against the nation, that it stood apart from the nation. But we have now a national army. All our young men are under its flag, and we are perfectly confident of its fidelity as of its valor. The highest personage in the world, as Gambetta proclaimed, should remain the soldier of right, and what we have dreamed for the integrity, honor and greatness of the Fatherland cannot be accomplished unless the national army is 'force at the service of right.' It

Charles Comeau, of Neganac, N. B., his terrible sufferings and his cure by Paine's Celery Compound, as follows: "I can conscientiously recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all who may be suffering from dyspepsia and liver trouble. For years, while living in Black River, I suffered from a complication of dyspepsia, and was so bad with dyspepsia that I could not touch a morsel of food. It was difficult to sleep, and what I did get was often broken with dreams. Intense sufferings from indigestion added to my load of agony. I had dizziness, pains in the back, a pale, haggard and despondent countenance, and was unable to get the slightest benefit, and finally gave up all hope of getting well. One day a friend, who had read of a wonderful cure by Paine's Celery Compound, begged me to try a bottle of the medicine. I tried it, and it was no use to throw away my money, but she pleaded so hard that I bought a bottle, and before I had used up I felt better. Encouraged by this, I continued with the medicine and it proved every day. I am now cured, thanks to Paine's Celery Compound. You cannot wonder why I am so glad to see Paine's Celery Compound, the greatest medical discovery in the world. I urge all who are suffering from dyspepsia to try this grand medicine and test its power."

The highest personage in the world, as Gambetta proclaimed, should remain the soldier of right, and what we have dreamed for the integrity, honor and greatness of the Fatherland cannot be accomplished unless the national army is 'force at the service of right.' It would therefore be an impious and unpatriotic work to make respect for the army degenerate into love of militarism. We have the religion of patriotism, and we will not debase it by making it a blind superstition. The faults and crimes of a few do not stain either the Fatherland or the army. An exciting trial, which has stirred and profoundly divided this country, is about to receive its final solution. If it has revealed delinquents, and if those delinquents are punished, it will be for the honor of the army to cast them from it, just as it will be for the interest of France and of the national defence.

"The difference between respect for the army and militarism has its parallel in the difference between respect for religion and clericalism. The latter is still the enemy, trying to use religious sentiments as an instrument of rule. It works by the perversion of consciences and creates social trouble. The clericals and those

THE PERFECT BRUTE.

How He Wriggled Out of It When His Wife Caught Him Fribbing.

"I have a very simple scheme for wriggling out of trouble when my wife catches me in a fib," said a perfect brute to several congenial companions. "On such occasions it is a great mistake for a man to attempt any explanation. The thing to do is merely to assume an air of injured innocence. That attitude will puzzle a woman and shake her confidence in your guilt. She will begin unconsciously to cast about for some explanation, some theory, some clew to the mystery, and when she finds one, no matter how preposterous, she will be so pleased by her own cleverness that it is easy to persuade her to accept it out of hand. You see, I have reduced the thing to a science. To illustrate:

"I told my wife not long ago that I would be detained over my books until past midnight. After I left, some neighbors, confound 'em, invited her to the theater, and during the last act she saw me, of course, with some of the boys in the parquette. When I got home, there was an explosion. I said nothing. I simply looked at her, sadly, wistfully, reproachfully. Next day there was another explosion. I resumed my tactics.

"That evening she said, 'Look here, Charley, I want you to tell me whether you really went to the theater to see Colonel Hawkins.'

"Then I remembered suddenly that Hawkins was seated at my left, and also that she knew I had been trying to close a large sized business deal with him. In the goodness of her heart the dear girl had arrived at the conclusion that I must have gone to the show to clinch that contract. I smiled wanly. 'I would have thought, Mary,' I replied with great gentleness, 'that something of the kind might have suggested itself to you before.'

"That was enough. She wept copiously. I was not a monster. I was a martyr. Eventually I forgave her upon her solemn promise never again to suspect me of an untruth. So you see how it is. If I had tried to explain, I would doubtless have made a mess of it and planted lasting seeds of distrust. As it turned out, the episode redounds to my credit. It's a great thing to have brains, boys, when you're dealing with women."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A COMICAL CLEANING.

How the Angry Squaw Got the Mud Off Her Papoose.

There is a camp of vag Indians out near some one of the alattoirs south of town, and during the past few days several of the gaudily attired bucks have visited the city and disposed of curious looking bric-a-brac made of horns, velvet
and willows, mounted into chairs, hat-racks and other improvisations. Occasionally a squaw with a papoose strapped to her back ventures up town via the alley route. She usually rides a cayuse.

The other day one of these species of humanity entered the city on the ridge-
pole of a disconsolate dun colored nag.
The papoose was tied to the saddle, and it was asleep. The old woman was foraging through the alleys and back yards in the southern part of town. She had collected many tin cans and discarded articles of wearing apparel. All this junk was strapped to the saddle and swung carelessly from the same thong that had held the sleeping infant close to the prominent ribs of the sorry cayuse. The squaw saw something up an alley that attracted her attention. She suddenly
"geed" the cayuse and pointed his head
in the direction of the object which attracted her. The sudden movement of the animal jerked the cans, rags and baby from their moorings, and down they all went into the mud six inches deep.

The squaw uttered an oath in Cree that frightened the cayuse. She dismounted and, grabbing the bundles, with an angry gesture flung them over the saddle, the papoose hanging on one side,
head down, and the junk on the other.
The papoose wailed just like any other child would do if it came out of such a plight alive. This annoyed the old woman. There was mud in the baby's eyes, mouth and ears. There was fire in the squaw's eyes. The cayuse seemed to enjoy it all.

Instead of wiping the infant's face with a handkerchief and trying to soothe its ruffled temper the mother took it in her arms, buried its face in the horse's mane
and rubbed it back and forth several times until the child's face was as bright
as silver after a vigorous polishing with chamois skin. The baby continued to cry, but the old woman left it to its own amusement while she continued up the alley to bag a huge soup bone that had done service in the family whose back yard was separated from the alley by a high board fence.—Anaconda (Mon.) Standard.

CARELESS ALL AROUND.

A Free and Easy Transaction in Which $5,000 Was Involved.

"I was stopping at a village tavern in Wisconsin," said the Buffalo man, "and it was an hour past midnight when the landlord knocked on my door and aroused
me from sleep to say that a gentleman wished to see me. I was mightily surprised, of course, but I tumbled out of bed and lighted the lamp and opened the door. There stood a well dressed stranger, who made all sorts of apologies for disturbing me at such an unreasonable hour, but asked if he might enter. I let him in, wondering whether he was a detective or an assassin, and, after fidget-
ing around for a minute, he said:

"The fact is I stopped here one night
about a week ago and left a package of $5,000 in the straw bed. I am awfully sorry to bother you, but I'd like to get the money and be gone."

"I was knocked out, of course, but pulled the covers off the bed and told him to search. There was a feather bed on top of a straw tick, and he searched the tick without finding the package. I was feeling that he had some grounds to suspect
me, when the landlord entered and asked:
"Are you the man from Cleveland who stopped here one night last week?"

"Yes."

"And did you leave $5,000 in the straw bed?"

"Yes."

"Well, my old woman found it, and it's lying on the mantelpiece down stairs."

"I had the curiosity to go down with them," said the Buffalonian, "and there on the mantel, mixed up with spectacles, clay pipes and door keys, was the package which had been found four or five days before, as if it were only an old book. When it was handed to the stranger, he said, 'Much obliged,' and started off, and as he went the landlord replied, 'Don't mention it,' and locked the door after him. Everything about the affair was so cool and careless that I've been mad ever since."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Romance That Was.
There's a graceful little clerk
Who goes every day to work
In a big department store down town;
She rides on the train with me.
Oh, her smile is fair to see,
And her eyes are big and velvety and brown!
I have seen her every day
As she rode upon her way
To deal out lace and linen in the store;
I have looked at her, and she
Has looked sweetly back at me,
But, alas! I fear that we shall flirt no more.
A villain yesterday
Snatched her pocketbook away,
And she turned and cried, "Oh, stop him, sir!"
But the thief pulled out a gun,
So I left them on the run.
And I rather guess that I am through
With her.

The Controller Controlled.
He was a man of mighty brawn, a Milo he for muscle;
His grip and twitch quick floored his man

And yet a mote, a microbe small, subdued
his fierce resistance
And laid him prone upon his back, beseeching for assistance.

Samples of Brick Walls.
In the city offices of a big brick manufacturing concern there are a number of small sections of brick walls. In old days bricks were substantially all of one color, but now they are made in many colors, in various shades of each of these colors. They also come in various shapes and sizes.
It is to show how the modern bricks look when laid that the little sections of wall were built. They were selected out of the many varieties of bricks produced, some dozen or 20, showing the different sizes and some of the different colors, and with bricks of these several kinds as many small separate sections of wall have been put up, the bricks being duly laid in mortar or cement.

The balance I raised myself and note which has not yet been altogether extinguished. That is all the about it. The house has been purchased by myself with the exception of a few gifts which were given to my wife by some of her lady friends. That is all there is in this transaction. For the accusation of the honorable gentleman there is not a shadow of foundation. The Messrs. Bate never furnished a house for me to buy it."

Mr. Taylor—"I accept the honorable gentleman's statement, but I am he has not lived in Ottawa and having heard what I have state I think he ought to be under obligation to me for having brought to his attention publicly, so that might give it a flat denial, as done to-day. ## IN THE YUKON.

Mr. John Ross Robertson assails government that it had acted in sending the militia force to Yukon. There had been of great Major Walsh, as an old Mounted officer, would naturally desire all credit to the police, but to the government would do more slowly in the matter of drawing the force. Mr. Robertson referred to the Associated Press stating that a force of 100 Police was to be placed in the Porcupine district of Alaska and this was done the United States send out a force to Pyramid Harbor.

The Premier made an explanation to the topography of the country. There is a Porcupine River, a Porcupine creek, the latter a tributary of the Lehigh river, which charges into the Chilcat about miles above Pyramid Harbor. There has been a Mounted Police force on the Lehigh for a number of years. Pyramid Creek is in the section, about five or six miles from the post. The government has no intention of fortifying the post. The mining camps in two forks of the creek known as Bryan and Kinley. "For my part," concluded Premier, "I will strongly object United States Government send force of military into that territory as long as the question of permanent boundary is not settled."

The full amount yet been paid and the Minister was inclined to think it should be allowed. In view of this debate seemed almost a waste of time.

A proposition was finally agreed for passage of all the other estimates amounting to $3,360

LAW OF USURY.

In the Senate, Senator Dan moved the adoption of the amendment to his bill respecting usury in the committee to whom he referred. The Minister of Finance made what looks like a very sensible proposition, which should tend toward encouraging the Royal Military College. They stood on the porch of the old farmhouse,

In the moonlight's golden glow;
"Do you love me enough to be mine?" he said,

POINTS ON COLORING.

There are colors that are refreshing and broadening, others that absorb light and give a boxed-up appearance to a room, others that make a room with a bleak, northern exposure, or with no exposure at all, appear light and cheerful; some that make a room appear warm, some that make it cold.

If a ceiling is to be made higher, leave it light, that it may appear to recede. Deepening the color used on the ceiling would make it lower—an effect desirable if the room is small and the ceiling very high. Various tones of yellow are substitutes for sunlight.

The thermometer seems to fall six degrees when you walk into a blue room. Yellow is an advancing color; therefore a room fitted up in yellow will appear smaller than it is. On the other hand, blue of a certain shade introduced generously into a room will give an idea of space. Red makes no difference in regard to size. Green makes very little.

If a bright, sunny room gets its light from a space ostruded upon by a russet-colored or yellow-painted houses, or else looks out upon a stretch of green grass, it should be decorated in a color very different from the shade chosen if the light shade comes from only an unbroken expanse of sky.

If olive or red brown be used in conjunction with mahogany furniture, the result is very different from what it would be if blue were used. Blue would develop the tawny orange lurking in the mahogany.

Red brings out in a room whatever hint of green lurks in the composition of the other colors employed.

Green needs sunlight to develop the yellow in it, and make it seem cheerful.

MIDSUMMER DISHES.

Potted Baked Beef—Take a juicy piece of boiling beef, enough to fill your bean pot, cover with water, adding salt, cover and place in oven, bake three hours, adding water if necessary. This is delicious to eat cold for summer during hot weather. Bake ironing days.

Desserts—Dainty, wholesome, inexpensive, of them there is no end. Short-cakes please almost all if properly prepared, and five or six minutes is ample time in which to prepare one ready for the oven, and they are a suitable dish for any meal, and the fruit or sauce can many times be prepared for some time before used. This is my way of making shortcake: A large half pint of unsifted flour, 1 teaspoon soda rounded a little, 2 of cream tartar, a pinch of salt, rub into the flour a quarter of a cup of shortening and mix into a dough stiff enough to roll out, with sweet milk or water, or thin sweet cream may be used and no shortening added. Sometimes I seems to bring out the picture without infringing on its rights of stage centre. Inexpensive gilt frames have been the finishing touch, and with almost no outlay at all she has produced something which is pleasing to the eye and gives the room that last touch which unpictured walls will never have.

The unframed picture, although pardonable in a studio or college girl's room, does not appeal to the careful housekeeper to whom, as to Amiel, "the unfinished is nothing." On the other hand, the really fine work of reproduction now in vogue is too tempting to throw away or relegate to the scrap books.

THE ART OF LOOKING COOL.

This is very desirable. Is it not a comfort to feel that you are an agreeable-looking person to meet?

To select a correct color is of the greatest importance. White and black are effective; light green and white form an attractive combination; the various blues, lavender and white are also excellent.

Select easy shoes, preferably tan ones, and loose corsets. Wear high standing collars or the softer, dainty effects, according to the gown, the individual taste and ability.

When wearied shopping, rest a few minutes in the library or art gallery, returning ready to cope with the multitudinous cares of our busy life.

Avoid all iced drinks.

Don't seem to hurry.

Don't think about the weather. While the mercury mounts rapidly upwards, if you toil not, thank Heaven for that; if you do, rejoice that you have the necessary strength, and that the work and you have met.

As much depends on the spirit as on the costume. Be at peace with yourself and the world. Think neither of your faults nor your trials.

Going forth quietly with a serene heart, a sweet face and an appropriate summery gown, one will have learned this art of looking cool.

WHITE SILK SKIRTS.

Nothing is prettier or more distinctly fashionable than the exquisite white silk skirt so much to be desired for their exclusive elegance and irreproachable good taste. The best examples of perfection in this line are elaborately trimmed with black lace. This is let into the flounces in strips of waved inserting or of cut-out sections of handsome net, and the edges are variously completed with rows of lace—with a further edging of black velvet or white or black half-inch satin ribbon frills. These little ribbon frills have lost none of their prolonged popularity, and have invaded the realms of underskirts with added zeal. They outline the bands of lace insertings, finish frills and project up over the skirts in various scroll, plaid or serpentine lines of unique beauty. Ruchings of fine gauze ribbon—the style having two little drawing cords make the prettiest—are a favored decoration for very handsome silk underskirts, and may be of solid color or edged in white or black, with great richness or exquisite delicacy.

Lover's knots, butterflies, large single flowers, sprays or set geometrical designs in Irish point, vanise, or guipure lace are let into the lik or muslin flounces of some of the new skirts, and are especially favored for trousseaux. Some of the prettiest new skirts, made to order, both of silk or cotton, are buttoned up one side, having no opening in the bias back, and secured by tiny pearl buttons beneath a fly, or they may have a close-set line of the regular packet snaps for greater security, for the skirts fit so smoothly that when fastened down

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN.

DIFFERENT POSITIONS WHICH THEY OCCUPY IN GREAT BRITAIN.

No Women Lawyers in England—There Are 55,000 Doctors and Surgeons—Numerous Other Ways by Which They Earn Their Living.

Some interesting facts have been made public by the Women's Institute of London in a compilation which they have made of the employment open to women, details of wages, hours of work and other information. This is designed primarily to aid the women of Great Britain in trying to decide upon an occupation or profession or in looking for employment.

Under the heading "Lawyer" it is stated that, although women cannot now obtain the qualifications needed for practising as a solicitor or barrister, one woman for many years has practised as a conveyancer. A few women have practised law and gone in for university examinations in that subject. There are two women who hold the London LL.B. and others who have passed the intermediate examination in laws, and at least two Girton students have passed the law tripos, but none of these examinations would qualify for practice. The benchers at one of the Inns of Court would have to be referred to for the admission of women as barristers. An Act of Parliament would be necessary before they could be admitted as solicitors. In 1897 a woman was admitted as a barrister and solicitor of the Supreme Court of

Sometimes I bake the cake on two plates, another time in one thick cake in a flat bottom tin and split the cake when I am ready to add the fruit; sometimes I make little, round, flat cakes, one for each individual. These look more dainty, especially with a spoonful of whipped cream heaped on top of each one. These cakes we eat warm, adding the fruit just before serving. Mashed and well sweetened strawberries, raspberries, blackberries and peaches all are nice for shortcake; stewed rhubarb flavored with lemon or pineapple is good, also new apples nicely flavored, or stewed quince. Any cooked fruit should be boiled until quite thick. Sometimes I add 2 tablespoons sugar to my shortcake dough. A cold shortcake I make of any plain tea cake mixture, baking it in Washington pie tins.

Cherry Pot-Pie—Two quarts cherries, pitted, sugar to taste, a piece of butter the size of an egg, a little salt, add at least a pint of water. Sprinkle over all, after putting in preserving kettle, a handful of flour, cook a few minutes until cherries are soft, it is well to place an inverted plate in bottom of kettle to prevent fruit sticking, stir into a pint of milk 1 egg, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 2 1-2 teaspoons good baking powder, with flour enough to make a stiff batter. Dip onto fruit by tablespoonsfuls, cover and cook 20 minutes, serve immediately.

Quick Bread or Rolls—One and one-half cups sweet milk, 3 tablespoons butter, 1 teaspoon sugar, a pinch of salt, 1 yeast cake dissolved in 3 tablespoons warm water, 2 1-2 cups flour, rise in a pan of hot water at temperature of 100 degrees. When raised add sufficient flour to knead, rise again and shape into loaves, rise and bake. This makes fine buns if you add an extra tablespoon of butter and 1-2 cup of sugar, currants and spice, also beaten white of an egg after the mixture has risen the first time. There is no difficulty in making and baking this bread before dinner is ready.

Stewed Apples With Rice—Pare and core some large russet apples, and place in a saucepan with sufficient water to cover them. Let them simmer gently until tender. Cook some rice with milk and turn onto a dish, put the apples on it and fill the spaces between them with more rice. Place in the oven until light brown.

Pear Fritters—Take some good cooking pears, cut them into slices lengthwise, cover with sugar, dip into batter and fry to a delicate brown. Take them out, dust over with sugar and serve with sweet or wine sauce.

PICTURES ON THE WALL.

A bright young woman, with an inventive turn of mind has devised some charming bits of wall decoration for her country home. A careful selection of the magazine reproductions of famous paintings, has been her inspiration, and from these she has chosen well known classical subjects, including a couple of Madonnas, Mona Lisa, the Laocoon, the Venuses, a Rosa Bonheur and so on. These she has mounted on grayish blue blotting paper, sometimes one alone, sometimes in groups of three, the paper making a mat of that indescribable tint which edged in white or black, with great richness or exquisite delicacy. Lover's knots, butterflies, large single flowers, sprays or set geometrical designs in Irish point, vanise, or gigue lace are let into the silk or muslin flounces of some of the new skirts, and are especially favored for trousseaux. Some of the prettiest new skirts, made to order, both of silk or cotton, are buttoned up one side, having no opening in the bias back, and secured by tiny pearl buttons beneath a fly, or they may have a close-set line of the regular placket snaps for greater security, for the skirts fit so smoothly that when fastened down the side they need strong closings to keep them in good shape. The flounces for underskirts are almost invariably cut circular when of silk, and very often so in cotton, although the latter are likely to stretch out of shape.

FAD IN RINGS.

The jeweler's trays are filled with curious little rings, which, at first sight, seem to carry no meaning, but which, upon a second glance, are most suggestive in their symbolism. These inexpensive little fancies are the fad of the hour.

For instance, here is a golf stick twisted into a circle, the gold being corrugated to reproduce the heavy leather covered hand, while a pearl ball ornaments the tip. What more appropriate prize than this could be given the winner of a golf tournament?

Then, for the rowing girl, we have a delicately fashioned loop, made of a thin, curved spoon bar of the racing shell. And the hunting girl's heart is delighted with a horn twisted into a circle with a fox's head, for an ornament. In this connection there is also shown a riding crop with a horse's head.

Of course, the expense attached to these rings remains a matter of choice with the purchaser. They can be perfectly plain, or the devices with which they are ornamented may be as extravagant as one's purse will allow. Many of them are shown heavily incrustured with gems, but for the purpose for which they were originally designed they are certainly in better taste for being simple and of good material.

NOTED PEOPLE'S FLOWERS.

Queen Victoria's favorite flowers are lilies of the valley and violets, and her intimate friends knowing her favorite blossoms, send her these in profusion on her birthday, at Christmas and at New Year.

Violets, the pet flowers of the late Emperor Frederick of Germany, have become quite sacred in the eyes of his widow.

Mrs. McKinley, wife of the President of the United States, admires Easter lilies about all other flowers.

The Duchess of York prefers lilies of the valley and white roses—the roses of York—for her own wear.

The Princess of Wales is the most ardent enthusiast of flowers among the royal family, and is never content unless her rooms are simply one mass of scented blossoms. As for the Prince of Wales, he cannot endure to be without his buttonhole bouquet.

INDIAN LAW COURTS.

In medicine women are well represented, there being about 55,000 of them practising as doctors and surgeons. There are in Great Britain two kinds of diplomas for the medical profession, one granted by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the other a medical degree granted by the universities. Every student, before beginning her medical study must pass a preliminary examination in arts. Those who wish for a university degree must take a degree in arts or the matriculation examination of the university. Appointment of women in England to medical posts is becoming more common every day. They frequently are chosen for asylums and infirmaries. The staff of the Hospital for Women is entirely made up of women.

A woman doctor is supplied as certifying surgeon in the general post-offices in London, Liverpool, and Manchester and as overseer of health of post-office women. Another woman is medical examiner in the Government insurance annuities department, G.P.O., London. A chief gets from $1,500 to $2,250 a year and an assistant from $1,000 to $1,500.

The Secretary of State for India also appoints a woman to the position of first physician of the Kame hospital. Among other Government posts to which women have been appointed are: Membership in various educational, industrial and reformatory commissions and asylum boards, inspectors of schools and factories, superintendents and matrons of prisons, etc., assistants in libraries and observatories, besides numerous positions obtained by competition in the clerical and telegraph service of the general post-office.

Almost 800 agents, brokers and factors are reported, and under "training and qualifications," it is set forth that "for this class of work a vigorous personality, robust constitution, and a nature not easily daunted by rebuffs are the necessary qualifications, and that for election, canvassers, sub-agents and organizers of political associations, political knowledge and experience are required. To act as an advertising agent an apprenticeship must be served under someone already established, as there are many complications and cross-interests connected with the business." Women are warned not to go into politics unless they have real political knowledge and deep convictions, as well as the power of impressing them upon others.

The number of women authors is put at 630, the qualification being set down as originality, excellence of style, mastery of the languages employed, literary culture and power of observation. Well known novelists, it is said, may receive $2,500 or more for one book but as a rule not more than $500 is paid for a novel and many writers are compelled to receive so small a sum as $50 or $75, or even to publish

There are almost 52,000 among the agricultural laborers in England and Wales. Hiring is held in some parts of the country where employers and employees make annual farm contracts.

"Lady help" is a term due to Rose Mary Crawshaw, who, some ago, read a paper before the Science congress on domestic science for gentlewomen, which subsequently was published in book form and had much interest. The help, as refined women, brought up in comfort and often in luxury, when deprived of the incomes to which they have accustomed, was set forth at and emphasis was laid upon the duty for practical and efficient training for women of all social grades. Recently domestic service as a career for gentlewomen has been advocated as a last resource, but as a recognized profession for which a thorough and practical training is required as indicated in the courses of home and domestic science laid down by the London board, the County Council and the various polytechnics. For class of housework, greater thought, accuracy, and skill may be expected, and the whole standard service elevated with great gain to the community at large.

RESCUING THE BABY.

A house on fire is apt so to upset the inmates that they throw the look- ing-glass out of the window and carry the mattress down the stairs. Miss Kingsley describes, in "West African Studies," a scene in which she herself and a native family were turned top-syturvy by an invasion of the terrible driver-ants. She writes:

I was in a little village and out of a hut came the owner and his family and all the household parasites pell-mell, leaving the drivers in possession but the mother and father of the family, when they recovered from this unwonted burst of activity, showed such a lively concern and such unmistakable signs of anguish at having left something behind them in the hut, that I thought it must be the baby.

Although not a family man myself, the idea of that innocent infant perishing in such an appalling manner roused me to action, and I joined the frenzied group, crying, "Where him live?" "In him far corner for floor!" shrieked the distracted parents, and into that hut I charged.

Too true! There in the corner lay the poor little thing, a mere inert black mass with hundreds of cruel drivers already swarming upon it. To seize it and give it to the distracted mother, was, as the reporter would say, "The work of an instant."

She gave a cry of joy and dropped it instantly into the water-barrel where her husband held it down with a hoe, chuckling contentedly. Shiver not, my friend, at the callousness of the Ethiopian; that there thing wasn't an infant—it was a ham!

WOMAN BICYCLE CLEANER.

To an English woman the credit is due for starting a new line of remunerative business. This is neither more nor less than the cleaning of bicycles. It is told that she "has her regular customers," to whose houses she goes for her work at regular and stated intervals. This she does for what amounts to 12 cents a visit, and her services seem to be welcome, even by those who keep several servants, for this new duty does not belong to the housemaid, nor, in fact, to any of the other employees of the household.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surface. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists, price 75c. per bottle. Bankers Again Victorious.

The lawyers and doctors again tried conclusions in a game of base ball on Wednesday afternoon last at the Driving Park, the bankers winning by a score of 29 to 27, after a five innings struggle. At the end of the third innings they were tie, but at the end of the fifth the bankers had piled up two more runs than their opponents. The game throughout was played with a vim and was very interesting.

Very Successful Excursion.

The complimentary moonlight given by the Canadian Order Foresters on Tuesday evening to Glenora was a decided success and one of the best conducted moonlight excursions leaving Napanee in some time. The weather was somewhat cool and a light rain interfered somewhat with the evening's enjoyment. The Str. Ella Ross carried a full load and on her arrival at Glenora the young people made the most of the hour's stay allowed by dancing and sight seeing. The committee in charge are to be congratulated on their efforts to make the evening's enjoyment a success.

A Big Concert.

When it is considered that a chorus of forty of Napanee's best singers and such soloists as Mr. Roland Paul, tenor, of New York, and Mr. F. W. Wodell, baritone, of Boston, are to sing, the concert of the Napanee Choral society, at the Opera house, Thursday evening, July 27th, may truthfully be described as a "big concert." But this is not all. Mesdames F. E. Vanluyen and E. Burritt, sopranos, and D. Boyes and Jas. Herring, contraltos, will also take solo parts. Miss Lilian Hall is to play the piano, which is to be a Gerhardt-Reintzman grand, sent especially from Toronto for this concert. The opera house is to be cooled by electric fans, and every attention will be paid to securing the com-

At Camden East, on July 12th, Mrs.
Alkenbrack, during an altercation, accused
Jno. Kingsbury with some serious wrongdoing. Before H. M. Deroche Esq., a day or so afterwards, Mrs. Alkenbrack apologised saying the words were used during the heat of a quarrel, and that in fact there was no ground for the accusation made.

A bad Egg.

Jno. Wilson, alias Jno. Macdonald, was up before police magistrate Daly on Monday, charged with being drunk. He was arrested on Saturday and while in the cooler tore all his clothes to pieces, while suffering from a fit of delirium tremens.
This said Jno. Wilson is no other than the tramp that broke into the McGinness restaurant eighteen months ago and was sentenced to nine months imprisonment.
Mr. Daly remanded the prisoner for a week.

Again on Dundas Street.

On Saturday evening the Salvation Army again held a meeting on Dundas street, in front of the Campbell House.
The sidewalk and street were soon blocked and the Chief requested the Captain of the Army to move off front street. The Captain refused, saying that the arrangement made with her predecessor as to holding meetings had nothing to do with her and she intended to continue holding meetings
on Dundas street.

Two Men Disabled.

An accident to a freight train on Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, a short distance east of Napanee, resulted in injuries to a Belleville man, Mr. Robt. Large, residing on Burton street, and the conductor in charge of the train. It appears that the hose bag, a part of the air brake, broke, applying the brakes, bringing the train to a sudden halt. Large and the conductor were in the van at the time and were thrown violently to the floor. The former sustained a severe injury to his right hand and also received a painful wound over the right eye. The conductor was cut about the head. Both gentlemen will be incapacitated from work for some days.

Children Cry for CASTORIA.

forty of Napanee's best singers and such soloists as Mr. Roland Paul, tenor, of New York, and Mr. F. W. Wodell, baritone, of Boston, are to sing, the concert of the Napanee Choral society, at the Opera house, Thursday evening, July 27th, may truthfully be described as a "big concert."
But this is not all. Mesdames F. E. Van-lunen and E. Burritt, sopranos, and D.
Boyes and Jas. Herring, contraltos, will also take solo parts. Miss Lilian Hall is to play the piano, which is to be a Gerhard-Reintzman grand, sent especially from Toronto for this concert. The opera house is to be cooled by electric fans, and every attention will be paid to securing the comfort of those who attend. Tickets are for sale by members of the society and at the Detlor-Wallace drug store, Napanee, where the plan for reserved seats will open Saturday morning, July 22nd at 9 o'clock.

Children Cry for CASTORIA. MATRON AND MAID.

Miss L. J. Large of Northam can claim a record of no fewer than 63 years' continuous Sunday school teaching.

Mrs. Russell Sage is an admirable needlewoman and, for amusement's sake,
insists upon doing much of her own sewing.

Mrs. Lucinda Pratt of Chicago on May 4 celebrated her one hundred and third birthday. She was born in Pittsfield, Mass.

Mrs. Booker T. Washington is her husband's most efficient helper in the management of the Tuskegee institute. She is a graduate of Fisk university.

The Duchess of Marlborough owns a spaniel whose ancestor was the dog which followed John Churchill, the first duke,
through the battle of Blenheim.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis is having a bronze statue of her husband made in New York city, which will be placed over his grave
in Hollywood cemetery, Richmond.

Mrs. Leland Stanford is to devote a year in the interests of Leland Stanford, Jr., university, to the study of the modes of government of the leading American colleges.

A pension of $27 a month has been granted Lulu B. Randall, the 16-year-old daughter of Frank B. Randall, chief engineer of Dewey's dispatch boat McCulloch, who died from sunstroke the day after the battle of Manila Bay.

Mrs. T. Benton Leiter, niece of Levi Z.
Leiter and a popular society woman of Chicago, has decided to go on the stage.
Mr. Leiter is an invalid, and Mrs. Leiter says she is actuated by a desire to support him, as their income of $300 a month is not enough to pay his doctor's bills.

Miss Jeannie Langtry, daughter of the Jersey Lily, whose debut in London society is scheduled for this season, is a very pretty girl, though not as handsome as her famous mother. She has been carefully reared, and Mrs. Langtry has kept her away from the theatrical and other gay associations.

Mme. Lancelot-Croce, the French artist, has just made for the French government
a necklace composed of 12 medals bearing the heads of the 12 most famous women of French history. The subject was inspired by Queen Margherita of Italy, and the ornament is to be presented to the empress of Russia.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts has just passed her eighty-fourth birthday. As the baroness is the only woman on whom the queen has conferred a peerage, she is "the second lady in the land," or, to use the words of the Prince of Wales, "after my mother, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts is the most remarkable woman in England."

CANTATA CONCERT NOTES.

The Rose Maiden Cantata concert at tue Opera house, Thursday evening, July 27th, is being talked about in all circles.

One of the great attractions of the Rose Maiden concert is the fine chorus. There are about forty of the very best singers in Napanee in this chorus and as they have been rehearsing three evenings a week for some time, some splendid singing may be expected from them.

The Choral society is especially fortunate in having Mr. F. W. Wodell, Boston, for its conductor. This gentleman is a finely educated musician, a splendid singer and has had many years of experience in conducting large choruses and orchestras in leading American cities. He gave "Rose Maiden" in Boston last spring with a chorus of 125 voices.

When Mr. Roland Paul, tenor, went to New York his fine voice was quickly appreciated and he was offered a fine choir position. He has been especially engaged as tenor soloist for the Rose Maiden concert. Don't fail to take this chance to hear him.

The Unlucky Opal.

"We are so happy," she whispers. "Yes, my darling," he answers. A sigh flutters her gentle bosom. "Do you know," she falters, "our great happiness frightens me? It almost makes me think the opal in my engagement ring is paste." In the clearest, brightest day the air holds the material of clouds, which at the first chill breath gather and overcast the sun.

Reiteration.

When Paw Was a Boy.

I wisht 'at I'd of been here when
My paw he was a boy.
They must of been excitement then—
When my paw was a boy.
In school he always took the prize;
He used to lick boys twice his size;
I bet folks all had bulgin eyes—
When my paw was a boy.
They was a lot of wonders done
When my paw was a boy.
How grandpa must of loved his son
When my paw was a boy!
He'd git the coal and chop the wood
And think up every way he could
To always jist be sweet and good—
When my paw was a boy.
Then everything was in its place,
When my paw was a boy.
How he could rattle, jump and race,
When my paw was a boy!
He never, never disobeyed;
He beat in every game he played—
Gee! What a record they was made—
When my paw was a boy!
